Amendment by Borah Makes States Supreme On Social Legislation

Proposal Offered to Beat Plan of Roosevelt.

Retirement Bill Up Before Senate

Compromise Forecast; 42 Votes Claimed Against Plan.

By Robert C. Albright.

Broadening of State powers to deal with social and economic problems, through a new version of the Fourteenth Amendment and specific limitation of the "due process" clause, was proposed in a constitutional amendment offered yesterday by Senator William E. Borah, Idaho Republican.

Borah said that under his proposal the Supreme Court would not have jurisdiction over minimum wage questions such as those raised in the New York case, as all State legislation dealing with social and economic problems would be eliminated from their review. He said this would relieve the high bench "of a lot of pressure and odium."

Put forward as an alternative to the President's plan to enlarge the Supreme Court by six justices, the amendment fell in a maze of compromise plans, and constitutional amendments in a Congress tensely divided on wisdom of the Administration's judiciary program.

Even as the Idahoan advanced his amendment, claiming "these problems of today could be met," the Senate prepared to call up another measure today in which some members have professed to see a possible solution to the clash of Supreme Court views.

Passed by House. This is the Summers bill which permits full pay voluntary retirement of justices at 70, and already has passed the House.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, the measure was made the Senate's pending order of business.

Possibility that two or more Supreme Court justices might retire under its terms—and it remained only a vague possibility—was the main motivating force behind the bill, which apparently is assured of passage.

The bill merely gives the Supreme Court judges the privileges now accorded other Federal judges. Should any high court justices retire, the proponents argue privately, pressure for the President's plan might be diminished.

Senate opposition to the President's bill, placed at 42 in private polls, yesterday was regarded as enhancing compromise prospects.

This apparently was regarded by Borah as a propitious moment of offering his amendment. On the other hand, neither the President nor Administration leaders in Congress have relaxed their drive for Congressional approval of every provision of the President's bill.

A delegation of nine members of the House, headed by Representative David J. Lewis (Democrat), of Maryland, and committed to the Administration's court plan, called on the President during the day, and assured him of their "interest and support."

Mr. Roosevelt suggested they all make speeches for the plan in their home districts, one member of the group later revealed.

Deny Commitment. The President still insists there be no compromise, it was learned from visitors at the White House.

Hull Urges World Adoption Of Buenos Aires Peace Tenets

'Military Catastrophe' or 'Economic Collapse' Only Alternatives, Secretary Warns; Assails 'Extremes of Nationalism.'

Peace founded on the tenets which guided the Buenos Aires conference is the alternative to world "military catastrophe or a crushing economic collapse," Secretary of State Hull warned last night.

"The future of our entire civilization is bound up with the acceptance by all governments of these fundamental tenets of constructive statesmanship," he warned in a speech on results and significance of the conference before the Council on Foreign Relations in New York.

Hull described "the principles underlying the instruments of peace forged at the Buenos Aires Conference" as follows:

"The right of each country to manage its own affairs free from outside interference; the principle of sovereignty and of equality of states, irrespective of size and strength; sincere respect for law and the pledged word as the foundation of an international order; friendly and co-operative effort to promote enduring peace, mutually advantageous economic intercourse based upon the rule of equal treatment, and mutually broadening and uplifting cultural relationships."

"A government which substitutes for these principles," the Secretary warned, "policies based upon extremes of national pride, ambition, aggrandizement and ever-increasing armaments, renders the greatest possible disservice not only to the world at large but to its own people as well."

After this indirect finger-pointing at dictator-ruled nations, the secretary said that the United States is prepared to do its part to bring it about that "the nations of this continent will order their lives upon a sane balance of national freedom and practical international co-operation," and concluded his speech on a note of relative optimism:

"I cannot believe that it is beyond the power of the statesmen of today to check and reverse the course of events."

Judges' Pay Bill Extending Often Lowered Trade Treaties On Retirement Passes Senate

Compensation of Former Justices May Be Cut by Congress.

By Franklin W. Waltman.

An examination of the series of economy acts passed by Congress during the years of the depression yesterday shed light on why justices of the Supreme Court over 70 years old have failed to resign during the last five years. Reductions voted by Congress in the pay of retired judges clearly indicated any former member of the Supreme Court is at the mercy of Congress in the matter of compensation.

Court Steps Out.

Former Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes enjoyed his full salary—even then subject to the Federal income tax—for less than six months after his resignation from the Supreme Court, although he lived more than three years after stepping down from the bench of that high tribunal.

Four changes were made in the retired pay of Justice Holmes during that period, one reducing his salary $10,000 a year, or exactly one-half of what it had been when he was an active justice. Just as Congress could reduce the pay of a resigned Supreme Court justice by one-half, it could reduce it further or deny it altogether.

Not only did Congress, during the economy period, reduce the salary of Justice Holmes, but it also undertook to reduce the compensation of all retired Federal district and circuit judges, but the Supreme Court prevented that, holding that under the judiciary act of 1919 the compensation of these judges could not be reduced after their retirement, if they had served 10 years on the bench.

Tax Began on Retirement.

Supreme Court justices, however, were not exempt from the provisions of the 1919 act and it is that omission which the bill sponsored by Representative Hattin Summers, of Texas, seeks to remedy. This bill has been passed by the House, and the Senate will commence consideration of it today.

It is not a part of the President's judiciary reorganization proposals, although it lays a basis for the Roosevelt program. Summers first projected his proposal about two years ago, but at no time until the present, did the President or the Administration

New Deal Leaders Finally Kill Cost-of-Production Amendment.

The Senate yesterday passed by a vote of 54 to 28 a measure extending the reciprocal trade agreements act until June 12, 1940. Only the President's signature is needed to make the extension law.

Administration leaders, somnolently shoving the measure toward enactment yesterday afternoon, were shocked awake suddenly when a surprise coalition of Southern and Western Senators slapped through passage, 41 to 36, of an amendment which would have applied the cost-of-production formula to all agricultural and horticultural products considered in trade agreements.

Offered by Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, and supported by Democrats Charles C. Andrews, of Florida; Allen J. Ellender, and John H. Overton, both of Louisiana, the amendment would have kept tariffs high enough to offset any foreign farmers' advantages.

Sounding a quick distress call, Senator Pat Harrison, Finance Committee chairman, rallied absentee Senators to the chamber and asked for reconsideration by changing his "nay" to "aye." The reconsideration proposal squeaked through, 43 to 37. Then Harrison moved the Pepper amendment again, and it was barely defeated, 39 to 42.

Adams, Pittman Dissent.

Administration leaders then pushed the bill proper, and obtained easy approval, 54 to 28, although two notable Democratic defections were seen in the "crucial" vote of Senator Alva Adams, Colorado, and Senator Key Pittman, Nevada.

Pittman did not explain his vote, but Adams had explained his in a lengthy blast at Congressional extensions of Presidential power. He read from a speech delivered in 1929 by an unnamed Democrat "still in the Senate," who denounced extending such powers to President Hoover.

Senator Alben Barkley, Kentucky, also admitted making the speech, Adams said in conclusion.

"Cordell Hull will not always be Secretary of State, nor will Franklin Roosevelt always be President. I'm unwilling that the power of taxation be put in the hands of the unknowns who may occupy those positions in the future."

Reorganizing Bill Changes Are Drafted

Plan Is Understood to Have Been Seen by President.

'Auditor General' Would Be Made Responsible to Congress.

Modifying changes in the President's reorganization program were before the Joint House and Senate Reorganization Committee yesterday, placing slight limitations on the President's "carte blanche" authority to shift and abolish agencies and making the proposed "Auditor General" the agent of Congress rather than the agent of the President.

Proposed changes were submitted by Louis Brownlow, chairman of the President's Committee on Administrative Management, and are understood to have been "casually" examined by the President. They followed close examination of Brownlow and other Administration experts at prior sessions, and sharp criticism of proposed changes in the general accounting office.

As the modifications were submitted, it became known for the first time that a long bill to effect major recommendations in the President's reorganization message, was before the committee, and an official summary of the original bill became available.

Civil Service Clause.

Specific provision is made in the bill for "the covering into the classified civil service at the expiration of one year from the enactment of the act of all non-policy making offices or positions in the agencies of the Government, other than temporary agencies and Federally owned and controlled corporations."

Also the President could cover into the classified civil service these offices at any time prior to the expiration of a year. He would be given authority to cover into the service by executive order positions in Federally owned and controlled corporations.

Transfer into the classified service would be dependent on certification of service with merit from heads of agencies, and passage of a noncompetitive examination. Even if they failed to attain such a status, they would retain their positions, but new appointments would have to be made under civil service laws.

"Clarifying Changes." The changes in the original bill before the committee yesterday, described by Brownlow as "clarifying" changes, definitely provided that the President may not abolish an existing department, bureau, office, or function, "except by transfer" of all of the functions of such a department to another.

One of the provisions specified that the President could not abolish the Department of the Interior, the District of Columbia or the Federal Reserve Board, and that he could not transfer "all" of the functions of the District government, or "any" of the functions of the Federal Reserve Board to any agency.

To assure "independence" of the general accounting office, which would become "the general accounting office," "auditor general," the revisions considered yesterday provided that "the general auditing office shall be independent of the executive branch and shall be an agent of Congress."

Criticism Evoked.

Abolition of the present "Comptroller General's" office under the reorganization plan and creation of an auditor general and an assistant auditor general who would make only post audits, had evoked the criticism when the plan was submitted.

The Administration's revision provides for an annual report to Congress of the audit for the preceding fiscal year. To further assure the auditing officials' independence, it was not listed as an "agency" and committee pointing out that "thus the President would have no power to reorganize it."

In reorganization of regulatory functions, the President is specifically provided that quasi-judicial functions "shall be segregated from policy determining, prosecution, enforcement or other administrative or executive functions."

Provides Commission.

A new subsection provides "that the regulatory functions of any independent regulatory commission which are quasi-judicial in nature, may not be exercised by or supervised by any administrative or executive officer, but shall be exercised by a regulatory commission which shall have a tenure of office in the manner prescribed by Congress."

Only "certain designated top posts," such as Cabinet officials, undersecretaries and the auditor general, would be subject to Senate confirmation under terms of the Administration bill.

The committee's draft of the proposed "Reorganization Act of 1937" provides for the creation of a Department of Social Welfare, a Department of Public Works, and a change in the name of the Interior Department to the "Department of Conservation." The Budget Bureau, the new Civil Service Administration and the National Resources Board would be set up as "managerial agencies," providing the President with "appropriate instruments for co-ordinating and improving administrative management of the Government in budgeting, organization, personnel and planning matters."

Tunnel Blast Traps Rebels Near Madrid

Loyalists Countermine Under Insurgent Dynamiters.

Government Bombers Storm Heights in Oviedo.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Feb. 25.—Dynamite touched off by Madrid's defenders shook two sections of the front today while government troops, hurling explosives, blasted their way farther into the outskirts of the northern city of Oviedo.

Government soldiers mined a moving picture theater in the town of Carabanchel, south of Madrid. Insurgents who had barricaded themselves within the building were killed when the mine was set off.

In the University City sector of northwestern Madrid, insurgent and government tunnelers almost crossed each other's paths as they burrowed toward the dental clinic, where government troops were entrenched.

The city's defenders saved the stronghold by exploding their mine first, destroying several buildings near the clinic but also wrecking the insurgents' tunnel.

Crucified Insurgents.

Col. Prada, government commander in the University City area, asserted the insurgent diggers would have reached their goal under the dental clinic within a few hours.

"As soon as we detected the click of their picks," he said, "our sappers set to work. Digging at a lower level, we reached a point directly under the enemy tunnelers and then we withdrew and blew up the thing."

The explosion was followed by a renewal of intensive artillery and rifle fire in that district but there was no appreciable change in positions, virtually the same for several weeks.

In the struggle for insurgent-held Oviedo, government dynamite-throwers reduced the Casa de America, a building of Santo Domingo College, to a shambles, but insurgent machine gunners continued to rain bullets at the government attackers, the accounts related.

The besieging Basques stormed the heights dominating Naranco Hill, the last insurgent trench line on the edge of the city, in what government reports called the bloodiest fighting of the civil war, said dispatches received at Bayonne, France.

The attackers asserted the insurgents in Oviedo were cut off from all hope of relief.

Continue Battle for Hill.

Madrid's soldiers continued their struggle for possession of Pinzaron Hill, on the Jarama front southeast of Madrid, hoping to drive the insurgents from the positions from which they have shelled the important Madrid-Valencia highway.

An estimate that 2,500 insurgents had been killed in one phase of the battle around the hill came from the government military command. The insurgents' valor in defending Oviedo won praise even from the Febus (government) News Agency.

Asserting they were fully aware they would "perish between sword and wall," the agency said, "a few madmen" were fighting there "like Titans."

The ground between the rival forces at Oviedo was strewn with bodies which none dared try to recover, the government reports said.

British Ship Mined.

Port Vendres, France, Feb. 25 (AP).—British steamer Glandover Castle, crippled by a floating mine, she struck off Capo de Creus, easternmost point of the Spanish mainland, anchored outside this port today.

The vessel's bow was stove in so low the ship could not enter the harbor. French naval tugs stood by.

The 10,600-ton liner, carrying 300 passengers, was proceeding from Gibraltar to Marseille when she hit the mine. Whether any passengers were hurt was not disclosed.

One Killed, 2 Hurt As Train Hits Auto At D. C. Crossing

One man was killed and two others were believed to have been injured critically when a new automobile in which they were riding was struck by a fast Baltimore & Ohio passenger train at the Bates road crossing, near the Sisters College early today.

The impact carried the auto for more than 100 yards.

The dead man, whose body was trapped in the twisted wreckage, was unidentified for more than an hour after the accident. Police were trying to free his body from the debris.

One of the injured men, according to police, was James T. Corbin, of 928 Madison street, Silver Spring. He was rushed to Casualty Hospital. Identity of the third man, believed to have been hurt and taken to a hospital, could not be immediately learned.

Utility strikers picketed two power plants at Minneapolis. Marching strikers encircled the Illinois Watch Case Co. plant at Elgin.

'Honor Slayer' District Police Found Guilty; Grant Expected Gets 20 Years In House Bill

Term Fixed by Jury; Out Three Hours After Pleas Are Ended.

By James D. Secrest.

An appropriation for the drafting of plans for a new police headquarters and the consolidation of the United States Park Police with the Metropolitan Police Department probably will be included in the District appropriations bill when it is reported to the House.

This was indicated yesterday after the House sub-committee had discussed police administrative matters at length with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

May Limit Traffic Police.

Chairman Collins declined to divulge the discussion at the executive session, but it is understood that Maj. Brown was advised that the public and members of Congress would prefer that his men spend less time and energy on placing traffic tickets and making trivial arrests and pay more attention to major law enforcements.

The sub-committee may write into the District bill a limitation on the number of policemen who may be assigned to traffic duty during the rush hours.

A suggestion has been made to the sub-committee that the park policemen be assigned to traffic duty on the city thoroughfares while Metropolitan officers for the most part remain on their usual beats.

Collins is known to be favorable to the suggestion that the park police be placed under jurisdiction of the superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, and it is believed the city provision for the transfer will be carried in the pending bill.

Playground Change Seen.

The consolidation will, in fact, probably be only one of several municipal mergers to be proposed by a shift in appropriations.

Collins believes that there is too much overlapping of jurisdiction and duties among District agencies and that some of the consolidations can be effected without legislative enactment.

The sub-committee chairman is known to have inspired the recent move of the District Commissioners and local business and professional leaders to make a study of reorganization proposals in the interest of a more efficient municipal government.

One of the mergers, it is understood,

Before dawn today the temperature will shrink to 18, officials at the Weather Bureau said. This, it was pointed out, will be the lowest reading of the winter.

State Trooper Guilty in Killing, Faces Term of 10 to 20 Years

By the Associated Press.

Somerset, Pa., Feb. 25.—A jury tonight convicted Stacy Gunderman, 25-year-old State trooper, of second-degree murder in connection with the "third degree" death of Frank C. Monaghan.

The verdict, under Pennsylvania law, carries a penalty of 10 to 20 years.

The jury, composed of ten men and two women, reached the verdict after seven hours and five minutes of deliberation.

Supreme Court Justice George W. Maxey gave the case to the jury shortly after noon, limiting 41

Union Must Win, Lawyer Declares

Warrants Accuse Group of Forcible Entry and Trespass.

By the Associated Press.

Santa Monica, Calif., Feb. 25.—Sit-down strikers who occupied for three days the Douglas Aircraft Corporation plant, world's largest airplane factory, evacuated tonight under escort of 300 officers armed with grand jury indictments, clubs, pistols, tear gas bombs and two machine guns.

For hours before strikers capitulated and after they had been indicted by the Los Angeles County grand jury, the "sit-downers" refused to budge from the plant. Police quoted some as saying they were "ready to die" before giving up.

The strikers' attorney, James Carter, said they capitulated only upon assurance of a quick hearing of their recently filed complaints against the Douglas company.

Far From Ended.

"The strike will go on until we force Douglas to abide by the law in recognizing our union and granting our just demands," Carter's statement said.

A series of 400 indictments which the grand jury voted during the morning accused 68 persons and 332 John Does and Richard Roes of conspiring in which an organizer (ag) the Committee for Industrial Organization has been active.

Surrender of the several hundred strikers came after Dr. Towne Nylander, director of the Federal Regional Board at Los Angeles, addressed them in the plant, and Carter advised them to give up. They were told the men were to be booked by authorities.

"The sit-down strikers in the Douglas plant were ready to defend the plant at all costs and agreed to permit the sheriff's army to peacefully enter the plant only when Dr. Nylander, representing the Government Regional Labor Board, informed them that the strike was against the Douglas Co. for violating the Wagner law in discharging union men and refusing to recognize the unions or conduct an election under the auspices of the Government."

It would be held immediately and not later than March 5.

"We depend upon the support of a decent public opinion, for the strike will continue. Picket lines will be organized at all the gates."

Subsidiary Closed.

President Douglas' main concern was to get the men out of the plant, which employs a total of 3,600 workers, and has a $24,000,000 plane building program, including $10,000,000 contracts with the Federal Government.

During the day doors of the Northrup Corporation, subsidiary of the Douglas Co., were closed to employees, as picket lines formed around the place.

The men were met at the plant by representatives of officials who informed them the plant would be closed during his strike trouble. Employees will be summoned when needed.

The Northrup plant is manufacturing Army pursuit planes, and ap-

Would Strengthen States' Rights to Deal With Own Social Ills.

On the President's plan, listing 42 Senators against it and 20 for it, brought little alteration in the line-up during the day. Senator Nathan L. Bachman, of Tennessee, listed against it in the poll, insisted he is not yet committed. Senators James H. Hughes, of Delaware, and Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, listed for the plan, reiterated they had not finally made up their minds.

A new flurry of pro and con speeches broke out in the House as other legislative business dragged. With Representatives Clare E. Hoffman (Republican, of Michigan), and J. Mark Wilcox (Democrat, of Florida) criticizing the amendment, Representative Knute Hill (Democrat, of Washington, defending it.

In the Senate, Administration supporters turned cold eyes on Senator Borah's amendment, but a large cross section of the Senate opposition to the President's plan endorsed its objectives.

Liberals More Drastic

Liberal opponents of the court program have sought a more drastic remedy than the Idahoan advanced, most outstanding of which is the amendment offered by Senators Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, and Homer Bone, of Washington (Democrats).

The Wheeler-Bone amendment would permit Congress to reenact by a two-thirds vote legislation invalidated by the Supreme Court, after an intervening Congressional election. But Wheeler said yesterday he had "no pride of authorship," and he will study the Borah proposal to see "if it goes far enough."

Borah, one of the Senate's outstanding Constitutional authorities, but a bitter opponent of the President's Court plan, proposed a re-written version of the "due process clause," long a center of Court controversy, as the means of insuring the States a path on social and economic problems in their own borders.

The clause in the fourteenth amendment, providing that no State may "deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law," has been construed by the courts in recent years as a restraint upon the substance of legislation as well as procedure. On this construction, the District of Columbia and New York minimum wage laws for women were invalidated by the court.

Borah's amendment would repeal the fourteenth amendment, re-enact its religious liberty, freedom of speech, life, liberty and property and other guarantees, but would place the following procedural limitation on the "due process clause":

"Due process of law as herein used shall have reference only to the procedure of legislative, administrative or judicial bodies charged with the execution and enforcement of the law."

"The State of New York, for instance, ought to be permitted to work out its own problems without being censured by a foreign government, which the Federal Government is, so far as Federal problems are concerned," Borah told reporters.

Power for States

"My amendment would give the States power to handle social and economic problems within the States. Their laws could not be set aside, provided the procedure was regular. The due process clause would be limited to procedure. The Supreme Court has held it covers the substance of legislation."

The Idaho progressive said he would have liked to have made further provisions, if he had thought it was possible to get them through, such as the stipulation that "persons" in the legal sense does not include corporations. But he added that he believed the amendment had enough "merit" as it stood.

The fourteenth amendment went into effect in 1868, and many of its provisions were designed to protect newly freed Southern slaves. As time went on, the provisions were interpreted to fit new conditions. Borah's version would re-enact the principal provisions but eliminate those he regards as obsolete. He provided it should become operative only if ratified in the several States "as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of submission hereof."

The amendment elicited words of approval from such Senators as Clark, of Missouri, and Burke, of Nebraska, opponents of the President's plan, but was viewed as no substitute for the President's plan by such Senators as Harrison, of Mississippi, Minton, of Indiana, and La Follette, of Wisconsin, who favor the judicial program.

Besides Representative Lewis, of Maryland, the House group calling on the President yesterday included Representatives Martin, of Colorado; Ramsey, of West Virginia; Voorhis, and Ford, of California; Knute Hill, of Washington; Hancock, of North Carolina; Maverick, of Texas (Democrat), and Teigan (Farmer-Laborite), Minnesota.

Lewis, a veteran exponent of court reform, spoke for the group on leaving the White House. He said there was no mention of a compromise, but a Constitutional amendment was discussed with the President "in a general way, but not as a scheme of treatment." One report was that the Administration was considering enactment of the President's plan, but with a provision that it should become operative if a Constitutional amendment were enacted in a stipulated period of time.

New Faces in Congress

Rep. Coffee, Slogan Slinger, Upsets Washington Opponent

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN MAIN COFFEE.

'Remember Quality, Forget Preus (Price),' Stamp Collecting Congressman Tells Voters; and They Seem to Like the Idea.

By Liam Lenihan.

John Main Coffee said it with slogans when he appealed to the electorate last November.

Tearing a leaf from the advertisement copy of the more expensive coffee firms, he stumped Washington State's Sixth District with the words: "Remember quality, forget price—remember quality and forget price—an effective phrase-play on the name of his opponent."

The stunt appealed to the voters as did Coffee's political views. He was elected by an overwhelming majority, defeating his Republican opponent, Paul A. Preus (who pronounced his name Price) by a ringing vote of more than two to one.

Graduate of the University of Washington, holder of a law degree from Yale, Coffee was born in Tacoma, January, 1897, the son of a politically minded father.

"My childhood ambition was to be a Congressman," he confessed yesterday. "Politics was always my forte. Even in college I was active in the student body's political administration and I represented Yale in interuniversity oratorical meets."

Prior to his election as Congressman, Coffee was active as a lobbyist before legislative bodies in behalf of liberal and labor measures. He sponsored and drafted a State-wide civil service bill which was defeated; he arranged for Homer T. Bone's campaign for the Senate; he served as secretary for former United States Senator C. C. Dill and he was connected with the State advisory board of the national recovery act.

Politically he is a progressive. He identifies himself with the Maury Maverick liberal bloc. And he is one of the authors of the American youth act, which calls for an appropriation of $500,000,000.

Foe of private utilities... "they have made a mess of things and prostituted legislation"... Congressman Coffee is sold on public ownership, as are most, if not all, of his colleagues from the State of Washington.

He favors mandatory neutrality, as opposed to discretionary and he had this much to say about the Supreme Court: "I am swamped with letters from voters back home demanding that I back up the President's court reform program."

Representative Coffee and Senator Bone are married to sisters. That would make them, in a broad sense, brothers-in-law. And both represent the same district in Congress, which should be in the nature of a precedent.

Hobbies? Stamp collecting mostly, though he likes to read biographical sketches. He goes in quite a bit, too, for swimming on his off nights when not lecturing and public speaking.

Judges' Pay Often Lowered On Retirement

Compensation of Former Justices May Be Cut by Congress.

leaders on Capitol Hill give it their active support.

Justice Holmes resigned on January 12, 1932, from the Supreme Court at the age of 90 after serving 29 years on that bench. Under provisions of the judiciary act, as amended from time to time, he was entitled to his full salary as at the time of his resignation—$20,000 a year. Although the salaries of active judges are not subject to the Federal income tax, Holmes' retired pay was from the beginning, which automatically reduced it.

Members of the Supreme Court knew that this reduction, due to taxes, would take place at the time Holmes resigned. What they did not know was that actual reductions were to be made in their former colleagues' pay within six months after his resignation.

Congress on June 2, 1932, passed what is known as the "first economy law." It was a rider attached to the legislative appropriation act, providing a general pay cut for Federal officers and employees and making certain special reductions in retired pay.

Section 106, Title II of that act provided that in its next session Congress should reduce the salaries of Federal judges, including Federal judges, "except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office." The reduction on salaries of $20,000 or more was 20 per cent. This provision applied almost solely to Justice Holmes, since other Federal judges were held to be still holding office in an inactive status.

But the act of June 2, 1932, did not stop there. In its next session it provided that "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, salaries and retired pay of all judges (except judges whose compensation is provided for by the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office) if such salaries or retired pay are at a rate exceeding $10,000 per annum, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

Thus for the year beginning July 1, 1932, and ending June 30, 1933, Holmes' salary was reduced to $10,000 a year, less the income tax levied against it. This action aroused some public hostility and it was in effect rescinded, after June 30, 1933, in the economy provisions of a rider attached to the Treasury-Postoffice appropriation bill adopted March 3, 1933.

Bill Restores Full Pay

In that act, although the economy provisions of the June, 1932, act were in general continued for another year, the section cutting salaries and retired pay of judges in half was dropped and the exception in section 106 was amended to read: "Except judges whose compensation prior to retirement or resignation could not, under the Constitution, have been diminished." This clearly excepted Holmes and had it stood his pay of $20,000 a year would have been restored to him on July 1, 1933.

Many members of Congress—including some of the leaders—and attaches of the Justice Department have been under the impression that

Text of Borah's Amendment

Text of amendment to the Constitution, proposed by Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, in a resolution offered in the Senate yesterday:

Section 1. The fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Due process of law as herein used shall have reference only to the procedure of executive, administrative, or judicial bodies charged with the execution and enforcement of the law.

Section 3. No State shall make or enforce any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the State or the Government for a redress of grievances.

Section 4. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed.

Section 5. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission thereof to the States by the Congress.

Included All Federal Judges

In effect this section undertook to apply a 15 per cent cut in pay to those judges expressly excepted under the acts of March 2 and March 20. Not only did it clearly apply to Holmes—the former member of the Supreme Court entitled to retired pay—but it also was applied by the Comptroller General to the retired pay of Federal district and circuit judges.

The origin of the section is not clear. It was inserted in the independent offices bill by the House Appropriations Committee and remained there throughout House and Senate consideration. In the House it, along with certain other sections, was protected by a special rule which permitted amendments to them to be offered only by the Appropriations Committee.

The House committee in its report said that "the President in transmitting the estimates of appropriations for this bill submitted also for inclusion a number of paragraphs of general legislation to enable him more fully to conduct the affairs of the executive branch with the utmost economy." But this particular section was not contained in the list of paragraphs of general legislation submitted on April 20, 1933, by the President, on recommendation of the Budget Bureau.

Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the appropriations sub-committee in charge of this bill, yesterday could recall how this particular paragraph originated. He remembered that at the time there was a general feeling among members of Congress that the judges, active and retired, should make some sacrifices, since everyone's pay was being cut.

When the 15 per cent reduction provided in this section was applied to the pay of retired circuit and district judges, several brought suit in the Court of Claims to test its validity. That court certified to the Supreme Court two questions as to the validity of the provision as applied to retired district and circuit judges.

In the Booth case, on February 5, 1934, the Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision written by Justice Owen J. Roberts, ruled that under the terms of the act of 1919 district and circuit judges who retired at the age of 70 or over after serving ten years on the bench, had the "continuing status of judges," since they were subject to occasional duty. The court held that "it is a contradiction in terms to assert that one who has retired in accordance with the statute may continue to function as a Federal judge and yet not hold the office of a judge."

Thus the Government was required to return to the retired district and circuit judges the 15 per cent deducted from their pay. But the statute on which the Supreme Court ruling was based did not give to Supreme Court justices the right of retirement. Thus Holmes had to resign, and he was outside the protection of the statute which applied to district and circuit judges.

Second Reduction Wiped Out

After the Supreme Court ruling Congress in Title II of the independent appropriations offices act, approved on March 28, 1934, continued in full force for the year ended June 30, 1935, section 13 of the act of June 15, 1933, except that the amount of reduction applied under that section should be the same as the reduction applied to Federal officers and employees. Under the McCarran amendments the rate of reduction was reduced to 10 per cent for the period between February 1, 1934, and June 30, 1934, and to 5 per cent during the year ended June 30, 1935. The latter reduction was entirely wiped out as of April 1, 1935, by a resolution approved February 13, 1935.

Thus Holmes' salary after his resignation from the bench was $20,000 from January 12, 1932, to June 30, 1932; $10,000 from July 1, 1932 to June 15, 1933; $17,000 from June 16, 1933, to February 1, 1934; $18,000 from February 1, 1934, to June 30, 1934, and $19,000 from July 1, 1934, to March 6, 1935, the day he died.

During that period he was the only former Supreme Court justice entitled to retired pay. There are none now. There is one living former Supreme Court justice, John H. Clarke, who resigned from the court in September, 1922, at the age of 65 and after serving but six years in the tribunal. Thus he was not entitled to retired pay. He resigned to give his entire time to cultivating public opinion favorable to world peace machinery. At the age of 79 years he now lives in San Diego, Calif.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

A cough, chest cold or bronchitis today may lead to serious trouble tomorrow. You can relieve them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified Croscote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery that aids nature to soothe and heal the infected membranes and to relieve the irritation and inflammation as the germ-laden phlegm is loosened and expelled.

Medical authorities have for many years recognized the wonderful effects of Beechwood Croscote for treating coughs, chest colds and bronchial irritations. A chemist worked out a special process of blending Croscote with other ingredients so that now in Creomulsion you get a real dose of Beechwood Croscote which is palatable and can even be taken frequently.

and continuously by adults and children. Thousands of doctors now use Creomulsion for their own families and practice, and druggists rank Creomulsion top because in this genuine, original product you can get a real dose of Croscote so emulsified that it goes to the very seat of the trouble to help loosen and expel germ-laden phlegm. Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles, especially those that start with a common cold and hang on and on. Get a bottle of Creomulsion right now from your druggist, use it all up as directed and if you fail to get satisfactory relief, he is authorized to refund every cent of your money, and can even be taken frequently. Maryland Road Proves Too Bad For Press Car

Frederick County Highway Found Muddy and Almost Impassable.

Residents of Frederick County, Md., believe that they are cursed with "America's worst road," and two representatives of The Post, after struggling through its axle-deep mud yesterday, heartily concur in this belief.

This road, one of many bad ones in a State which ten years ago could boast of its highways, is blamed for the death of a woman, much prolonged illness, great hardship and a heavy loss of income. Fifty protests have been made to the State road commission, but have not been heeded.

Children have been deprived of schooling at Urbana, Md., because their school bus on several occasions was mired and the roads so deep-rutted and muddy on other occasions the driver did not dare the trip through. Fifteen Urbana children appeared at Frederick Tuesday afternoon carrying protest placards to the county courthouse, where commissioners sit. Their plea was referred to "Annapolis."

Climaxed by Death.

Dramatic climax of conditions was the death of Mrs. Ida Harris, of Thurston, Md., living only a short distance from the end of the pavement as modern distances are measured, she was stricken with grip. A doctor was summoned, but he could not get his car through the mud. For three days she lay abed without medical aid, hopeful that the road would dry and help would come.

On the third day the grip turned to pneumonia. Still without a doctor, a neighbor, Lester L. Gregg, farmer and carpenter, managed to get his car to her home. Mrs. Harris was put in the car and with the aid of a team of horses she was laboriously hauled to the highway. Men with shovels moving in advance, and then rushed to a hospital. It was too late. She died at the hospital.

Gregg had bitter experiences with the roads in Frederick County before. A few weeks ago an old Ford which he had found more practical in the mud than his big car, sank into a mudhole not many yards from the pavement. Two teams of horses could not pull it out. Half a dozen men worked for hours. Then a freeze came on. The Ford froze solid.

Stuck Car Blasted.

Meanwhile other cars became stuck behind him. One driver had to get to Washington, another to Frederick, another to Baltimore, on urgent business. There was nothing else to do. Three sticks of dynamite were borrowed from Charles L. White and the car was blasted into eternity. It was the only way to clear the road. White is chairman of a farmers' committee trying to get better roads.

"They brought Mrs. Harris' body home for the funeral. A thaw set in and the roads turned to rivers of slime. Now it was impossible to get a hearse to her home. The body had to be trundled out on a farmer's cart and taken to the waiting hearse 2 miles up the road. Finally she was buried."

The Washington Post car attempting to survey conditions yesterday became stuck twice. The first time the tractor was found at the home of Hamilton Linticum, who has been giving first aid to travelers all winter. The tractor got stuck. Then the help of John Davis, plantation owner, was enlisted. He sent a team out to the road and the team pulled tractor and automobile through all using full power.

Mrs. Davis said that her car got stuck every time it is driven out of the barnyard. Sometimes she has been stuck three times on one 2-mile drive to the highway, and now she and her husband never attempt to reach the Bethesda market, where they must go twice a week with dairy produce, without hitching up the team to follow them down the road. "She calls her auto a 'horse car'."

Her children are all sick with colds, she said, because the school bus cannot get to their home and they must wade through mud and snow a mile every day to the end of the bus line. The school bus driver, Roger Geisbert, has had to abandon the last 2 miles of his scheduled run. Children get to the bus as best they can.

"We've been paying taxes on this farm more than a hundred years," Mrs. Davis said yesterday. "Mr. Davis' grandfather owned it before us. The roads are, nevertheless, so bad, despite all the taxes, that we get stuck every time we leave the place."

"This is a farmers' market road. They're supposed to keep it in good condition. My husband has hauled three big loads of stone this winter and 12 last winter, but it doesn't help. The stones seem to sink down to China in the mud. We can't keep a decent car. Having them around with horses has ruined three cars for us in four years."

Must Wade to School.

"I've been laid up all winter with colds. We have to go to market to live. Every time we go out we get stuck and then I catch cold, sleeping in water or working with the teamsters, trying to get free. Peggy, my daughter, has to wade so far to the school bus, she's had colds all winter. So have my little boys, Leonard and Jack."

"This is hard to believe, but only last week we were stuck so deep on a hill we had to unhitch the horses from the front of the car and hitch them to the rear to pull it downhill. The exhaust pipe was flattened that time and smoke filled the car. I had to get out in the water."

Chairman White, of the Farm Neighbor League, has conducted a fierce but fruitless campaign for assistance. He has led some 30 delegations into the county seat to plead for aid, but so far has received none. Other farmers on nearby roads also have besieged the county commissioners, but to no avail.

Reason for the sorry road conditions in rural Maryland is laid by farmers to the transfer of rural road control from the county to the State in 1933. The revised law relieved counties of road maintenance, road building and road retirement bonds. The change in the law arose from demands of counties that they get a larger per cent of the gasoline tax revenues than they had previously been allotted. State politicians agreed, but requested in exchange that all road maintenance be ceded to them. This was done. Recently large parts of the gasoline tax have been diverted from road maintenance to other uses, with the result roads are left uncared for.

Utility Profits Are Described At SEC Study

Harrison Williams, Holding Company 'Emperor,' Tells of Deals.

ago to the passage of the public utility act of 1935.

Williams was questioned first about his original operations in 1912, when he admitted he formed the Central States Electric Co. to buy control of the sound and successful Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.

"That's a hell of a long time ago," said Williams pleasantly, in defending his somewhat foggy memory of the transaction, but he admitted his company was "deliberately superimposed on top of the Cleveland company."

Questioning brought out his method which he termed "the conventional method of the time." Williams, it was shown, obtained a loan of $750,000 from the Guaranty Trust Co. in New York, with which he bought stock in the Cleveland company. Then he sold to the public through retail distribution by investment bankers, preferred stock and notes in his new holding company. The public's money paid off his loan at the Guaranty Trust and he received a "substantial bonus" in common stock of the Central States company, he said.

Schenker asked: "Did one nickel of the proceeds of the sale of 9,000,000 shares of Central States stock go to the Cleveland company, which was a substantial company not looking for financing at the time?"

"No," said Williams, who testified that Myron T. Herick, former American Ambassador to France, was a participant in the deal.

"What was the economic justification for this transaction?" asked Schenker.

"It wouldn't be possible for me to go back and recall what my ideas were at the time," parried Williams. "But it was evident that you used the public to finance your deal by which you acquired ownership of the Cleveland company," asserted Schenker.

"The public became the owners," said Williams. Amid laughter, Commissioner Douglas cut in to ask Williams' definition of "control."

While Williams stressed the technical legal definition of "control" as ownership or control of 51 per cent of a corporation's stock, Douglas emphasized the view that as little as 12.5 per cent of the stock, such as Williams then owned, reasonably could constitute practical control of a company. He then noted that Williams and his friends were members of the executive committee of the company, one of them being president, and later Williams himself headed the organization.

Began Operations in 1906.
The operations, outlined in brief, began with Williams' organization of the American Gas & Electric Co. in 1906. In 1912 his syndicate bought 60 per cent of the Cleveland company stock, worth $5,724,000, and turned this over to their own company, Central States, for $10,568,800 in notes and stock. In 1922 he bought 30,000 shares in Central States for $800,000. In 1924 he bought 11,000 shares of Central States and subscribed to 49,000 shares for $200,000. He had then put in $2,972,000.

Williams now has seven personal holding companies through which control is exercised on the numerous operating companies that make up his utility empire, he admitted.

When a school bus gets bogged down in the mud of the old Urbana road in Frederick County, Md., what happens? Well, in the first place, a man like Harry Anderson has to slog through with his big team and wagon and pull the bus out. And children like the three little Pipers—Douglas, Estelle and Leslie—have to hike to school.

Secretary Hull Warns World Of Catastrophe

Peace Tenets Outlined at Buenos Aires Called Only Alternative.

drift toward international anarchy, in the direction of which some parts of the world find themselves moving.

"The work of the recent conference proves, in my judgment, that no part of the world needs to reconcile itself fatalistically to the inevitability of war."

"Upon the same basic principles that are implemented at Buenos Aires, the entire world can—and I hope with all my heart, will—build a structure of enduring peace."

Two Unique Features.

Previously, he had described in detail his view of the achievements of the inter-American conference, asserting there were two features which distinguished its atmosphere from that of its predecessors. The "concentration upon the problem of safeguarding the maintenance of peace," and "the dismal world setting" at the time.

In this setting, he went on, representatives of the 21 participating nations accepted "three main premises":

"The American hemisphere has a distinct and peculiar contribution to make, because no nation in it is driven by any compulsion or professes any right to threaten the peace of its neighbors. . . . the only safety for all nations is loyal acceptance of a rule of law under the integrity of every country . . . will be assured . . . renunciation of war . . . must be implemented by a method of action which can set into action almost instantaneously the co-operative effort of the hemisphere in the direction of pacific settlements."

Analyzes Accords.

Secretary Hull then proceeded to an analysis of the accords reached by the nations at the conference, of which he selected three as of major significance. The first he cited was the convention which co-ordinates and extends existing treaties in this hemisphere.

This convention includes a pledge that American nations not only will consult in any controversy arising between them, but also will not resort to military action for six months after such consultation begins. If, despite these precautions, war occurs, the signatories promise to adopt "a common and solidary attitude in order to discourage or prevent the spread or prolongation of hostilities," Hull said.

Names Three Situations.

A second agreement specifies three situations threatening peace which will act automatically for consultation: If "the peace of the American republics is menaced," if war occurs between American states, if a war outside this hemisphere threatens its peace. Last of the accords Hull singled out was the protocol which reaffirmed the 1933 Montevideo conference's declaration that "no state has the right to intervene in the internal or external affairs of others."

"What a boon to humanity it would be," the Secretary concluded after he had summarized these agreements, "if other groups of nations were, at this crucial stage in world affairs, to give their pledged faith to a similar undertaking—if they were, in a spirit of peace, unity and moral consecration, to reassert and revitalize the law of nations, international morality and treaty obligations, and to pledge solemn observance of the doctrine of the equality, the sovereignty, the territorial integrity and the liberty of all nations."

Nurses Terrified, One Is Injured By Male Intruder

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Feb. 25 (AP)—Maj. H. B. Wheeler said today an intruder entered the nurses' quarters at this Army post last night, frightened a score of the women, injured one and escaped before the military guard arrived.

Maj. Wheeler said the injured nurse, Miss Isa Pifer, was slightly cut on the head by a piece of broken glass when the man, who entered her room, stumbled and fell, breaking a bottle he was carrying. The intruder apparently cut his own hand, the officer said, for bloodstains were found on the floor and steps.

Miss Pifer awoke, saw the man and screamed, arousing the other nurses. The intruder fled.

'Rat Number 1' Caught After Bank Robbery

Merle Vandenhush, Long Sought, Captured by Town Policeman.

By the United Press.

Katonah, N. Y., Feb. 25.—Merle Vandenhush, called "Public Rat No. 1" by G-Men, was arrested today by a small-town policeman as he fled in a coupe after allegedly robbing a bank of $20,000.

Two other men, accused of holding up the Northern Westchester Bank here, were arrested with Vandenhush, who had dyed his hair in an unsuccessful attempt to disguise himself.

Vandenhush was wanted by Federal men and police in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and New Jersey for crimes ranging from murder to bank robbery. He is described by Federal authorities as a partner of Harry Brunette, blasted by gunfire and tear gas out of a West Side hideout in New York December 15. Vandenhush slipped through the Federal dragnet and escaped.

Slams Rumble Seat.

Sheriff George Casey of Westchester County identified him as the man for whom Department of Justice agents have been searching all over the country. They say he was identified as one of the men who kidnaped William A. Turnbull, New Jersey State trooper, on September 11, and took him from New Jersey to Pennsylvania.

The three men, seized shortly after the bank robbery, were riding in a coupe when police halted them at Armonk. A police broadcast had asked all officers to be on the lookout for the bank robbers.

Patrolman William G. Hendricks saw a coupe coming toward him on highway No. 2, and he stepped into the middle of the road and signaled for the car to stop. It did.

Only one man was in the seat of the coupe and he said he was "just riding around."

Hendricks went to the rear of the coupe and opened the rumble seat. Two men inside pointed guns at him, and Hendricks slammed the top of the rumble seat closed.

He called to Sgt. John A. Hergenhan and Patrolman William Orman, who were in a police booth nearby.

Robbers Wore Overalls.

The three policemen ordered the two men inside the rumble seat to drop their guns. When they heard the weapons clang against the floor, they opened the rumble seat and the two men crawled out.

Police said they found part of the money stolen from the Katonah bank in a paper bag in the rumble seat. The Armonk police telephoned Chief of Police Frank R. Mallette, of Bedford Township, to take charge of the prisoners.

Despite the fact that he had dyed his hair, Vandenhush was recognized by Sheriff George Casey of Westchester County. Police said they had notified the Federal Bureau of Investigation and that they expected G-men to enter the case. The three prisoners first identi-

Suicide of Boy, 13, Laid To Wild West Stories

Limon, Colo., Feb. 25 (AP)—The parents of Frankie Lewis, 13, blamed "too many Wild West magazines" today for his death from a self-inflicted bullet wound.

The boy shot himself in the heart with a .32 caliber pistol after his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Pat S. Lewis, filling station operators, said they had reprimanded him.

Sit-Down Idea Fought by Law On Wide Front

Police, Officials End Many Strikes as Six New Disputes Begin.

By the Associated Press.

The power of the law aimed a heavy blow yesterday at labor's widely used stratagem—the "sit-down" strike.

As peace officers moved on the big Douglas aircraft plant at Santa Monica, Calif., to force a showdown in the "sit-down" siege of company and Government property there, groups of "sit-downers" quit their demonstrations at Los Angeles, Decatur, Ill., and Philadelphia and 107 others were ejected from a shipyard at Groton, Conn.

Gov. Wilbur Cross, of Connecticut, decreed there would be no "sit-down" strikes in his State.

A half dozen new disputes cropped up to increase the troubles besetting more than 50 firms and keeping more than 27,000 persons idle.

4 New Detroit Strikes.

Several hundred workers joined four new strikes in Detroit against Swift & Co., the Bon Dee Golf Ball Co., the Detroit Delivery Service, and Mitchell & Smith, Inc., manufacturers of auto gaskets.

Some 300 unionized WPA workers encamped in the District WPA headquarters at Spokane, Wash.

Approximately 200 members of the night crew launched a similar movement at the Vulcan Corporation at Portsmouth, Ohio.

A police ultimatum to "get out" ended a brief spell of sitting for 60 workers at the H. Daroff & Sons clothing plant at Philadelphia.

The Century Wallpaper Mills resumed operation at Decatur, Ill., after 47 "sit-downers" surrendered to a force of officers. Eleven pie makers at Los Angeles also gave up their sedentary protest.

Pickets patrolled the Electric Boat Co., builders of Government submarines at Groton, but State policemen forced them to split their lines to permit employees to enter the yards.

Strike leader James O'Connor expressed a fear of bloodshed unless the officers were withdrawn. The company estimated more than 1,700 of its 2,000 workers were on the job. Unionists claimed no more than 300 continued to labor.

"Pole-Climbing Strikers.

Unionized electrical workers picked two plants and a warehouse of the Northern States Power Co., at Minneapolis. Electric service lapsed for periods of several minutes to several hours in areas outside the downtown district. The company blamed pole-climbing strikers.

Snow-dancing pickets roughed four men who endeavored to enter the strike-bound plant of the Illinois Watch Case Co., at Elgin.

Desertions left only 61 men in the two Farnsworth Metalurgical Corporation factories at North Chicago, Ill., seized by more than 80 strikers eight days ago. Gov. Henry Horner continued his efforts to arrange a truce.

Fifteen per cent wage increases brought resumption of operations in all but ten shoe factories in three New England cities. The United Shoe and Leather Workers Union predicted the others would agree to the wage boost.

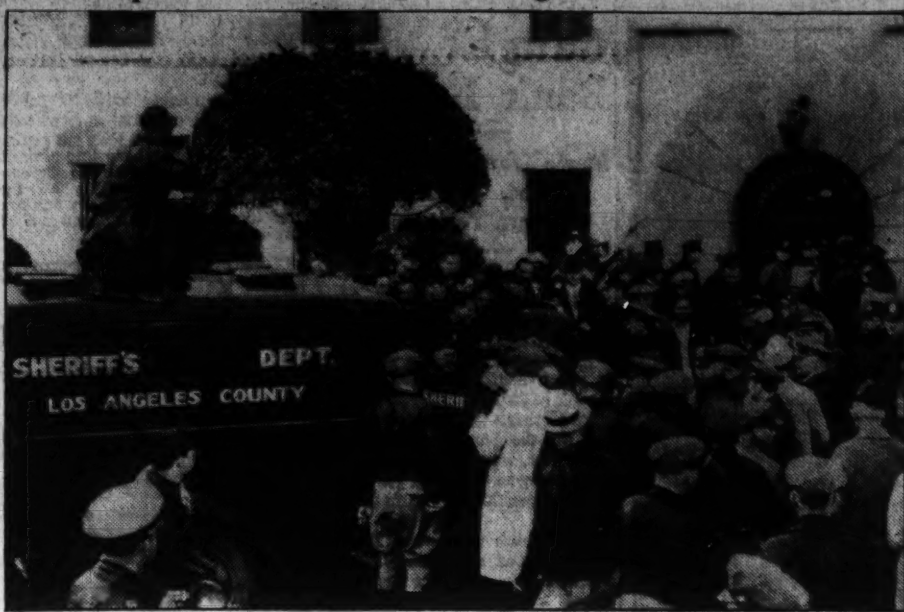

Lewis Goes to New York.

Strikes ended at the Perry-Morse Seed Co., the Arvey Corporation and the Palace Model Laundry in Detroit.

Generalissimo John L. Lewis of the Committee for Industrial Organization went to New York. There a committee representing the 400,000 members of the United Mine Workers Union and the Appalachian coal field operators continued wage discussions.

emerged from a Detroit conference with the United Automobile Workers Union spokesmen on a demand for a 30-hour week with this comment:

"I don't think the country is ready for it yet."

The union has arranged a collective bargaining conference with Chrysler Corporation—the second of motordom's big three served with that request.

Meanwhile, the publication "Iron Age" reported the steel industry was inclined to the theory that there would be no general steel strike in the immediate future.

Farnsworth Plans Last-Ditch Fight

John S. Farnsworth will make a last-ditch fight in District Court today to have his plea of "nolo contendere" set aside and a plea of not guilty substituted for it.

Late yesterday, his newly retained attorney, Richard L. Tedrow, filed in District Court a plea for an "arrest of judgment" which, if granted, would automatically stay the imposition of sentence and probably result in the granting of Farnsworth's plea that he be permitted to stand trial on the charge that he sold confidential Navy information to the Japanese government.

Justice James M. Proctor directed that Farnsworth should be brought before him for oral arguments and after a hearing, he remanded Farnsworth for sentence today.

Taylor's Grandfather Stricken, Likely to Die

Beatrice, Neb., Feb. 25 (AP).—Jacob A. Brugh, 82, grandfather of Robert Taylor, screen star, was seriously ill at the home of his son, Roy, today. Physicians said they did not expect him to live.

Until recently Brugh was a $16 a month pensioner, but county assistance officials obtained a promise of aid for the elderly man from his grandson, Taylor, said he would have proper care given Brugh.

Standing Rites Monday.

Hollywood, Feb. 25 (AP).—Funeral services for Sir Guy Standing, popular British actor who fell dead yesterday, will be held Monday in St. Stephen's Church. The widow, Lady Dorothy Francis Standing, his third wife, said the body would be sent to England for burial.

stare of her father, who sat almost at her feet as she directed her testimony to the jury, constantly keeping her face averted from Hunter.

Hunter had denied being drunk at the afternoon in May, 1934, when the State charges, he shot to death Mrs. Hunter and Corcoran at his home in Virginia Highlands. He had testified also to going out into the kitchen and preparing meals for his three children when they came home from school.

Asked if her father appeared to be drunk when she returned home from school at 3:30 that afternoon, the daughter replied emphatically: "Yes, sir."

Furthermore, she said, when she came home from school at noon Hunter, Corcoran and her mother were sitting in the living room and she went into the kitchen and prepared herself a lunch of bread and milk.

Hunter displayed no symptoms of insanity during the nearly three years he was confined in the Southwestern State Hospital at Marion, Va., according to the testimony of two psychiatrists, Dr. George A. Wright, hospital superintendent, and Dr. A. D. Hutton, his assistant.

Dr. Wright expressed the opinion that "Francis"—I always call him Francis—was never insane. He also opined that Hunter was "sane and responsible" at the time the crime for which he is being tried was committed.

Wright said Hunter's mother had come to the institution to ask that her son be given certain privileges. "I did not think these were proper," he testified. "If it was proper for him to have these privileges, I felt that he was able to be returned to the court."

Anne Hunter was preceded on the stand by Victor Parke Delmas, a brother of the slain woman, who testified he called at the Hunter home on the day before the killing, staying from late morning to late afternoon waiting for Hunter.

Students Protest Command to Lick Floor, Blackboard

By the Associated Press.

Danville, Va., Feb. 25.—A special school board meeting was called tonight to consider charges of two grade-school boys that their teacher had required them to erase a blackboard caricature and remove paper scraps from the floor with their tongues.

The two pupils complained to their parents that they had been humiliated before the class in punishment for what they called minor infractions of rules. Their names and that of the teacher were withheld.

Mrs. Charles Ragland, acting principal of the school, said the teacher, a substitute, had admitted exacting the unusual penalties. G. L. H. Johnson, school superintendent, termed the incident "most unfortunate."

"If the teacher had been a member of the regular staff, I should recommend her dismissal. There is little I can do under the circumstances except place the matter before the board."

Parents of the two pupils and members of the Parent-Teacher Association complained to Johnson after the boys reported the incident.

Grand Jury Ends Warring Inquiry

Concluding its investigation of Police charges that Emmett Warring, brother of Charles R. (Rags) Warring, and three others were guilty of operating a lottery, the District grand jury yesterday withheld its report and will return it in open court next week.

Warring, who is at liberty on bond of $2,000 was arrested on a warrant when he voluntarily appeared in the office of Commissioner N. C. Turnage last week. The others, Ellis L. (Sugar Pops) Solet, Edward J. Julian, and Edward Oliver, were already under arrest and were under $2,000 bond each.

Arrest of the four grew out of a raid on the "clearing house" allegedly used by Georgetown "numbers" men to sort out their day's receipts and make out the winners for the day.

approximately 1,000 men normally are employed there.

C. I. O. organizers said the union demands on the Douglas employers were for wage increases of 15 cents an hour, union recognition, reinstatement of three employees they contend were dismissed for union activity, seniority rights, time and a half for overtime and double time for Sundays and holidays.

C. I. O. organizers claim they have signed up a majority of the 5,600 Douglas employees, including more than 1,000 since the strike started.

At the Northrup plant, the situation was comparatively calm after company officials ordered the plant closed down and most of the 1,150 workers there today walked out. About 50 sit-down strikers were left in the place.

$7,000 Bonds Set In Operation Death

A woman and her husband were at liberty under bonds totaling $7,000 yesterday after a coroner's jury held them for the grand jury in connection with a death due to an illegal operation.

Frank Rowley, 30-year-old mechanic, 1409 Eighteenth place south-east, was arrested by police shortly after the death of Thelma Scherer, 28, who died in Gallinger Hospital last week as a result of an illegal operation.

A coroner's jury held Rowley under $5,000 in connection with Mrs. Scherer's death. After the inquest, Mrs. Rowley, who was a spectator at the hearing, was arrested by Detective Sergt. John Wise at the direction of the District Attorney's office. She was charged with her husband for allegedly performing the criminal operation.

Art Lecture and Exhibit Is Arranged for Today

A private lecture and exhibit of water color paintings by young Washington artists, recently shown at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Germany, will be presented today at 5 p. m. at the Carlton Hotel. The exhibit has been arranged by Eric F. Menke, who was in charge of it when shown in Germany.

Among the artists whose works will be seen are Roland Lyons, Phil Bell, who has worked on Government murals; Mitchell Jamison, now painting in the Virgin Islands and R. A. Jansen.

Mine Strikers, Starving, Hold To Pay Demand

Several of 265 Workers Entrenched in Pit 'Almost Dead.'

By the Associated Press.

Pecs, Hungary, Feb. 25.—Seventeen miners, most of them staggering and bloody, escaped from a strike-locked coal mine tonight with grisly tales of fighting below between self-appointed pickets armed with hatchets, axes and picks, and other miners who wanted to quit a stay-down hunger strike.

Fourteen of those who reached the surface were injured, because they had to fight their way past the pickets, who, they said, were "crazy." They reported several of 190 men still in the mine were "almost dead." Three men escaped by a ruse.

Some of those who escaped said as they left the mine they heard sounds of battles continuing below as others, tiring of the hunger strike, which began yesterday, tried to fight their way out.

Tension increased in the mining town. Several miners were arrested for violating orders posted against loitering or collecting in groups.

Attempts to negotiate a settlement were deadlocked. Strikers refused to enter a conference when they learned work was going on in other pits.

229 Pass Tests For Admittance To District Bar

341 Fail in Examinations; Sons of Lemke, Blanton Are Successful.

(Names of successful candidates will be found on page 25.)

Of the 570 men and women who took the District Bar examination December 21 and 22, 229 passed, it was announced here yesterday by the committee on admissions and grievances. District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, 341, the largest number in the history of the District Bar, failed.

It was explained, however, by John Paul Earnest, chairman of the committee, that these 229 persons, of which 65 are women, have passed only the mental test.

When candidates apply for permission to take the bar examination, they must supply from 8 to 10 references. The committee now will send a questionnaire to each of these references to determine the character of persons who were successful in this examination. Those who pass this moral examination will be admitted to the bar, the second Monday in April on Earnest's motion.

Among those who passed the examination, thus completing the first half of the requirement, were: William F. Lemke, jr., son of William F. Lemke, Presidential candidate in the last election and Representative from North Dakota; William Blanton, son of former Representative Thomas Blanton, of Texas; B. W. Guy, son of Walter Guy, a local lawyer; Frank T. Burkhardt, son of Joseph Burkhardt; Arthur Clephane, nephew of Walter C. Clephane, Miss Marion Toomey, daughter of Prof. James Toomey, of Georgetown Law School, and Albert P. Wheatley, whose father, H. Winship Wheatley, is a former president of the District Bar Association.

Commenting on the large number of men and women—1,250 last year—who took the District bar examination, Earnest said that about 70 per cent are Government clerks who have no intention of practicing law. Another 10 per cent, he said, are employed in real estate, banking and insurance offices here. Another 10 per cent, employed by Congressmen, will return to their home States to practice and the remaining 10 per cent will actually practice in Washington.

European War Not Imminent, Prominent Journalist Declares

SIR ARTHUR WILLERT.

Hitler and Mussolini Slipping, Says Willert, Former Washington Correspondent, on Visit to White House.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Fear of war prevents war. Every major country in Europe today is trembling in its boots, treading carefully. An international conflict is not imminent.

So thinks Sir Arthur Willert, British journalist and authority on foreign affairs, now on a lecture tour of this country. He and Lady Willert are guests at the White House during their visit to Washington, where they lived for ten years when Sir Arthur was correspondent for the London Times.

Sir Arthur in an interview yesterday discussed everything from war to the Duke of Windsor; from the Spanish situation to Mrs. Simpson. What he said about any one of these subjects could be a story within itself. Highlights resolve themselves into a sort of kaleidoscopic view of the whole European picture, as follows:

War—"No European country is ready for it. Germany pretends to be, but playing the policy of bluff is a German characteristic. Italy is recuperating from the Ethiopian conflict. England and France don't want war, and if Russia were really prepared to fight, she would probably have given stronger support to Spain. When people are thoroughly frightened they generally take steps to prevent war, rather than to plunge into it. That's what they are doing now, by agreeing to non-intervention policies, by strengthening diplomatic relations by raising their own bulwarks of defense against poisonous propaganda."

The Spanish situation—"It's a damned sight too boring to discuss," he declared. But he did say that what has happened in Spain seemed to be exactly what Italy, Germany and Russia wanted to happen; that principles of democracy were too often pictured as being communistic; and that the anti-Communist attack is a well-worn Fascist trick for turning the tide of popular opinion in favor of dictatorships.

Mussolini—"Has slipped in popularity the past year, despite his victory in Ethiopia. Today, he is rather like a first-class driver trying to steer a second-class vehicle."

Hitler—"A second-class driver in a very good vehicle. The show in Germany today has it all over the one in Italy."

France—"Is making remarkable progress under President Blum. His program of social security—of democracy in practice as well as theory—is bringing his country to

Gem-Theft Suspect Enters Guilty Plea

Pleading guilty to two indictments charging theft of jewelry valued at $1,100, John Morischek, 49, "too perfect butler," yesterday was remanded to District Jail by Justice Peyton Gordon while a study of his past life is made by probation officers.

The butler was employed by Mrs. Henrietta Bugher, of 1785 Massachusetts avenue northwest, and it was from her and her son, Frederick McLean Bugher, that the gems were stolen. While the two pieces were the only ones mentioned in formal charges, Morischek is said to have taken jewels valued in excess of $300,000. They were sent to a woman in New York, who, because of her absence from home, never received them.

Police recovered the jewels in New York by tracing articles found in the butler's quarters.

Md. Legislature Ready to Press Police Inquiry

Second Phase to Start as Politics Playing Charge Is Expressed.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 25.—The Legislature was set tonight for the second phase of its investigation of the State police department, which has become the principal topic of discussion in the State House corridors.

Senator John D. C. Duncan (Democrat), Baltimore County, chairman of the committee of five Senators, declared he had every intention of pushing the inquiry as far as developments warranted. He refused to comment on reports that pressure was being exerted to end the inquiry.

Gov. Harry W. Nice, who later will be questioned in connection with the inquiry, today disclaimed all knowledge of this reported pressure. He declared he was not interested in the ending of the investigation. "My stand is just as it was," he said. "I am perfectly willing to tell the committee anything it wants to know when it wants to call on me."

Maj. Enoch B. Garey, deputy police superintendent, at the opening session charged Gov. Nice with playing politics with the department. He said the Governor had ordered the ill-fated expedition to Tangier Island last February, during which a State trooper died.

The Governor has made a blanket denial of the Garey charges. Senator George Hofferbert (Democrat), of Baltimore, member of the investigating committee, said he was not fully satisfied with statements made by Garey. He declared witnesses should be put under oath and hearsay testimony barred.

Herbert R. O'Connor, attorney-general, will be asked to give the committee an opinion on its powers under the resolution ordering the investigation. The committee members desire to know just how far they can go in the matter of summoning witnesses and administering oaths.

Although no date has been set, it is expected that the committee will later hear J. Purdon Wright, first State police superintendent; William H. Blakeman, budget director, and Harry C. Jones, State employment commissioner, Republican triumvirate named by Garey as having "muddled" in the affairs of the department.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation presents the Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll, Nikolai Berzowski, Nicolas Moldaven and Victor Gottlieb) Thursday afternoon in the chamber music auditorium. Program: Quartet in G minor (Schubert), Quartet No. 2 (Walter Piston), Quartet in A minor, Op. 33 (Dohnanyi).

Even the finely balanced and sensitive performance given by William Kroll and his colleagues could not make the posthumous G minor quartet of Schubert sound like treasurable music. Only the minute movement has the authentic Schubertian fusion of lyric inspiration and spontaneous verve. In the other movements, thematic material has been stretched so obviously to fit the form, so reiterated to serve the purpose of symmetry, that one's attention is drawn more to structure than to content. In the perfect work of art, content and form are one and indivisible.

The impulse to preserve every scrap of writing from the pen of genius is natural, but genius does not need this ancillary service. It is in the great works that perdurable quality abides, and the lesser products are not completely representative of their creator's mind.

Walter Piston's strongly marked individuality is held in restraint by respect for classic principles. He has never adhered to the cult of expressionism, and he has a sure feeling for the limitations of the medium in which he writes. His harmonic radicalism is not experimental, but directly related to neoclassic tendencies. The firm texture of his music is contrapuntal, with no neglect of any voice in the development of motives.

One is aware in his music of a cultured and fastidious nature, electric in taste and precise in expression. His second-string quartet is definitely English in its affiliations, and it is evident that he knows the English strain from Byrd to Vaughan Williams. Not that he is anywhere imitative in this work but the presence of sympathy for the British spirit is unmistakable. As for structure, the quartet is finely proportioned, save in the slow movement which is a trifle too discursive.

The third quartet of Erno von Dohnanyi is a far cry from the frank romanticism with which he started in his piano quintet. Romanticism remains, for that is an ineradicable part of his musical character, but it has been modified and transformed by modern factors. The poetry is as intense as ever, and the vitality does not flag, though the idiom has changed.

U. S. Steel Bids For $2,000,000 Made by Firm

Statement of Corporation Denies it Refused to Enter Offers.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 25.—United States Steel Corporation subsidiaries have entered bids for more than $2,000,000 in Government contracts under the Walsh-Healey act requiring specified hour and working conditions, a statement issued by the corporation today said.

The statement, intended to dispute reports the subsidiaries had refused to bid, said that on the offers entered, contracts had been awarded for $672,000 worth of material.

"In short," it continued, "the steel corporation subsidiaries have bid on all Government contracts calling for material of their manufacture in every case where in the opinion of the particular subsidiary involved compliance with the stipulations of the Walsh-Healey act would be feasible, even though such compliance would add to the cost of manufacture."

Asserting that processes involving molten steel must be operated on varying bases of hours and days, the statement said:

"Navy orders for the construction of ships comprise such a variety of products in the form of plates, shapes, bars, sheet and strip that even a sizable order would only require the partial operation each week of the major part of the facilities of almost any plant. To introduce a different operating scale for such portion of the operations that may be involved for Navy work would completely disorganize the whole production of several plants."

Bill Extending Trade Treaties Passes Senate

chiefly Republican proposals, which Senator Harrison declared would "sound the death knell" of this bill, was defeated before the Pepper amendment was brought forth. Strength had developed surprisingly, however, for a suggestion by Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, that the agreements be posted for 30 days before becoming effective.

Vandenberg Aroused.

Aroused by Senator Harrison's assault on this idea, Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, arose to growl.

"The Senator from Mississippi has made an eloquent plea that has nothing at all to do with this amendment. This is a meek and timid proposal that informs the American people in advance of what is going to happen to them. * * * This isn't a matter of canned beef sold by Argentina to this country. It's a matter of canned treaties. * * * We should at least permit our citizens a casual, brief squint at these treaties."

The amendment was beaten, 48 to 32.

In the House, meanwhile, the Foreign Affairs Committee reported out a broad discretionary type measure for a permanent neutrality law by a 15 to 3 vote, presaging conference difficulties when the Pittman bill of the Senate, now chiefly mandatory, passes the upper chamber. It will be brought before the House in the week of March 7. Chairman Sam D. McReynolds, Tennessee, said of the bill:

"We have taken a middle ground. If you undertake to put our Chief Executive in a straitjacket in matters of this kind, you have to a great extent tied up our country so that it cannot use its good offices for the prevention of wars."

Count Faces Operation.

Havana, Feb. 25 (AP).—The Count of Covadonga, former heir to the Spanish throne, will undergo an operation for an abscess on his leg tomorrow. It was learned from a reliable source today. He had a similar operation several months ago, and was in critical condition for several weeks afterward.

Summary of Reorganization Bill Before Joint Congressional Committee

Official summary of proposed bill now before the joint Congressional reorganization committee, embodying Administration proposals, revision of which, as suggested by the committee, may be found elsewhere in the paper:

Title 1 confers upon the President the continuing power to reorganize, after investigation, the several agencies of the government by transfer, retransfer, regrouping, co-ordination, consolidation, segregation, establishment, and abolition of agencies and functions, for the purpose of improving the effectiveness of administrative management, reducing expenditures, and otherwise increasing the efficiency of Governmental operations.

It is closely patterned after the reorganization provisions of the economy act of June 30, 1932, as amended, the constitutionality of which has since been sustained by the Attorney General and the courts. It does not require, however, that executive orders be submitted to the Congress 60 days prior to going into effect.

Reorganization Provided.

Title 2 provides for the reorganization of the Civil Service system. Part 1 establishes a Civil Service administrator and the office of Civil Service administrator and prescribes the organization of the administration and the method of selection and qualifications of the administrator. The administrator will be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, from a list of three highest eligibles certified to him as the result of an open competitive examination prescribed and conducted by five examiners appointed by the Civil Service Board, created by part 2 of this title.

The United States Civil Service Commission and the offices of Civil Service commissioners are abolished, and all functions vested in that commission and those offices are conferred upon the Civil Service administrator. Additional functions also are conferred upon the administrator, designed to assist him in developing an effective career service in the Federal Government, and in general improving the administration of the Civil Service.

Board Is Planned.

Part 2 establishes in the Civil Service a board and prescribes the organization of such board. The board will be composed of seven non-political, non-salaried citizens, appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate.

It will represent the public interest in the administration of the Civil Service laws, act in an advisory capacity to the Civil Service administrator and report to the President and to the Congress on the quality and status of the Civil Service system.

The board will appoint a special committee to conduct an examination for the office of Civil Service administrator whenever there is a vacancy in that office.

Part 3 provides that all officers or positions to which appointments are made by the President alone or by the President and with the consent of the Senate shall, except with respect to certain designated top posts, hereafter be filled without term by the heads of the agencies having jurisdiction over such offices or positions.

Automatically Covered.

Part 4 provides for the automatic covering into the classified civil service at the expiration of one year from the enactment of the act of all non-policy-making offices or positions in the agencies of the Government, other than temporary agencies and Federally owned and controlled corporations, and at the same time authorizes the President to cover such offices or positions into the classified civil service by Executive order at any time prior to the expiration of such period.

The President also is given power to cover all non-policy-determining offices or positions in Federally owned and controlled corporations into the classified civil service at any time.

Incumbents of offices or positions thus covered in the classified civil service will not automatically obtain a classified civil service status, but may obtain such status upon recommendation by the head of the agency concerned within one year after the offices or positions are covered, and further certification by the head of the agency that incumbents have served with merit for six months prior to the enactment of this act, in the case of offices or positions in regular agencies, or six months prior to the executive order covering such offices or positions into the classified civil service in the case of those in Federally owned or controlled corporations.

Must Pass Test.

In addition to such recommendation and certification, incumbents must also pass a non-competitive examination prescribed by the civil service administrator. However, in the event that incumbents of any such offices or positions do not obtain such a status they may nevertheless retain their office or positions, but all appointments in the future to such offices or positions must be made in accordance with the civil service laws.

The President is given continuing power to exempt offices or positions from the classified civil service upon a finding by him that they are policy determining, or that good administration will be facilitated thereby and also to cover exempt positions into the classified civil service. The President will have no power to cover offices or positions, or exempt them from the classified civil service, or to confer a classified civil service status upon incumbents of such offices or positions, except as described in this title and Title 5.

Part 5 authorizes the President to extend by executive order the provisions of the classification act of 1923, as amended, to any office or position in the several agencies of the Government, including Federally owned and controlled corporations, and vests in the President power to prescribe additional classification services and grades in the event that any offices or positions are not properly allocable to existing services and grades.

Certain offices and positions expressly covered by compensation statutes other than the classification act (such as, for example, officers and employees in the foreign service of the United States) are withdrawn from the President under part 5. The President is given the power to make additional exceptions to the classification act with respect to particular types of offices or positions specified in the act which are principally temporary in character or financed jointly by the United States and other agencies.

Part 6 amends the classification act of 1923, as amended, by redesignating, and increasing the rates of compensation in certain of the higher grades of the professional and scientific service and the clerical, administrative and fiscal service. New schedules of salaries are also prescribed for secretaries, undersecretaries, and assistant secretaries of the executive departments ($20,000, $15,000 and $12,000, respectively).

Policy Is Declared.

Title 3—Part 1 declares the policy of Congress with reference to the reorganization of the auditing and accounting functions of the Government.

Part 2 establishes a joint Congressional committee "the joint committee on public accounts" and prescribes the organization and functions of such committee. This committee will consider reports of the auditor general (see part 3 of this title) with respect to settlements of public accounts deemed by the auditor general to have been improperly made by the Secretary of the Treasury and expenditures deemed by the auditor general to have been improperly made by the agencies of the Government, and after such consideration the committee is required to report thereon to Congress.

Part 3 changes the title of the General Accounting Office to "General Auditing Office" and the titles of public accounts deemed by the General of the U. S. and Assistant Auditor General of the U. S., respectively, and provides that the functions of the general auditing office shall be confined to the auditing public accounts and reporting first to the Secretary of the Treasury all public accounts deemed to have been improperly settled and then to report to the Congress every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury has not revised his decision to meet the objection of the general auditing office.

Part 4 transfers to the Secretary of the Treasury all functions now exercised by the General Accounting Office which do not remain in the general auditing office under the provisions of part 3, except the function of countersigning Treasury warrants which is conferred and imposed upon the director of the Bureau of the Budget. The Secretary of the Treasury will thus have the power now exercised by the General Accounting Office to settle and adjust all public accounts.

A bureau of fiscal affairs is established in the Treasury Department under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury through which the Secretary is to exercise the functions conferred and imposed upon him by the act. Certain additional functions are also conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the supervision of accounting procedure in the agencies of the Government.

Under Part 4 the decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury in the settlement of public accounts will be final and binding upon all agencies of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury will not be the final arbiter, however, with respect to his own jurisdiction and authority to render such decisions (see Part 5).

Part 5 confers upon the Attorney General of the United States the power to render opinions with respect to the jurisdiction and the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with the settlement of public accounts, which opinions will be binding upon all agencies and officers of the Government. This provision is designed to eliminate the conflicts as to jurisdiction and authority which have arisen in the past between the General Accounting Office and the several agencies of the Government.

New Department.

Title 4 Part 1 establishes a new executive department known as the Department of Social Welfare and prescribes the organization of such department and its functions, which in general are to co-ordinate and promote public health, education and welfare activities.

Part 2 establishes a new executive department known as the Department of Public Works, and prescribes the organization of such department and its functions, which in general are to design, construct and maintain major public works which are not incidental to the normal work of other agencies and act as the other agencies upon their request in public works incidental to the normal work of such agencies.

Part 3 changes the names of the Department of the Interior and the Secretary of the Interior to the "Department of Conservation" and the "Secretary of Conservation," respectively.

Part 4 abolishes the existing national resources committee set up in 1935 by executive order and establishes, as a managerial planning agency, under the President, the national resources board, and prescribes the organization of board and its functions, which in general are to study, assemble, co-ordinate, etc., data relative to plans and planning policies for the development and utilization of the resources of the Nation, both natural and human, and, on the basis thereof, to initiate and propose in an advisory capacity, such plans and planning policies.

Title 5—This title contains general provisions defining terms used in the act and provides for the disposition of the personnel, property and appropriations of agencies or functions transferred or abolished under the provisions of the act, and in addition contains the customary savings provisions with respect to laws, regulations, suits, etc., affecting reorganization.

One term of particular interest defined under this title is "managerial agency" which has reference to the Bureau of the Budget, the Civil Service Administration and the National Resources Board. The first of these agencies has been strengthened, and the others have been created for the purpose of providing the President with appropriate instruments for co-ordinating and improving administrative management of the Government in budgeting, organization, personnel and planning matters.

This title also contains miscellaneous provisions which provide:

1. That the President and the heads of the executive departments, the managerial agencies and the civil service board may, for the purpose of consultation, investigation and research, under regulations to be prescribed by the President, employ experts and consultants for temporary periods without regard to the civil service laws or classification act of 1923 as amended.

A Liaison Agent.

That the director of the Bureau of the Budget may assemble and disseminate information concerning all phases of governmental activity and serve as a liaison agent between the agencies of the Federal Government and between the Federal Government and State agencies.

For the appointment of undersecretaries in executive departments which do not have such officers, and for such additional assistant secretaries in any of the executive departments as Congress may from time to time appropriate for.

That heads of agencies affected by the act are authorized to make expenditures for personal services, rent, travel and other specified purposes.

An authorization for the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act.

This title also prescribes the effective dates of the various provisions of the act, and the short title of the act: "The reorganization act of 1937."

stood, may eliminate practically the District playground department by transferring jurisdiction of all school playgrounds to the community center department the year around instead of only during school semesters.

Members of the House subcommittee needed no testimony from Maj. Brown to convince them that an appropriation is needed to begin work on a new police headquarters. They visited the present building before hearings began and agreed that it was one of the worst municipal structures they had seen.

There is little indication that the subcommittee will increase appreciably the number of Metropolitan policemen, but it is believed that more policemen will be made available by a shakeup of assignments.

For instance, Collins intimates that he believed too many policemen are assigned to clerical duties. He likewise believes that more motorcycle and motor vehicle equipment is needed to enable the men to cover more territory in their patrols.

Horse-mounted policemen—long a dream of Maj. Brown—are definitely lost for this year at least, Collins hinted.

"I never could see that a horse is a very efficient machine," he said. "If the police just want something to hold back crowds in time of parades or rush hours," he added with a chuckle, "why, we'll give them a couple of tanks."

Today the subcommittee will hear officials of the fire and health departments.

U. S. S. Craven Christened By Mrs. Frank Learned

Quincy, Mass., Feb. 25 (AP).—The United States Navy destroyer Craven, sister ship to the Gridley launched last December 1, slid down the ways today at the Fore River plant of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, Ltd.

The vessel named in honor of Commandant Tunis Augustus Macdonough Craven, who lost his life in the sinking of the ironclad Tecumseh, at the battle of Mobile Bay August 5, 1864, was christened by Craven's daughter, Mrs. Frank Learned.

Attorney General Charles J. McGowan charged Monaghan was "deliberately" killed because he refused to admit cutting Detective John Wall. Wall recovered.

He investigated Monaghan's death and personally conducted a grand jury investigation which resulted in murder indictments being returned against Gunderman and these six Uniontown peace officers:

District Attorney James A. Reilly, Assistant District Attorney Harry W. Byrne, County Detective Wilbert R. Miner, Jack Hann, a former detective; night Police Chief Charles Malik and State Policeman Anthony Sanute.

Five others were charged as accessories in "concealing true facts" about Monaghan's death.

Blast Kills 7 Officers.

Brasschaet, Belgium, Feb. 25 (AP).—Seven Army officers were killed and 11 injured today when 40 pounds of dynamite exploded at a military camp. The officers were receiving instruction in the demolition of bridges and roads when the fatal charge exploded.

Emil G. Stucky, Once O. Henry's Landlord, Dies

Pioneer Druggist, Born in Switzerland, Lived Three Years in Chevy Chase.

The druggist above whose old-fashioned apothecary shop O. Henry spun many of the stories that were to make him famous died in Chevy Chase last night.

He was Emil G. Stucky, dean of Pennsylvania pharmacists until his retirement in 1933. Mr. Stucky, who was 80-years-old, but active until the last few weeks, succumbed at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Melba Stucky Billig, 36 Drummond avenue. He had lived there since he left the profession in which he was a pioneer.

Mr. Stucky's life paralleled the growth of Pittsburgh from an undeveloped, rough river town to a huge city of steel. He saw the pharmacy business change from one where druggists sold only medicines and occasionally candy to one in which everything from a quick lunch to a mechanical train could be bought.

Born in Switzerland.

Born in Switzerland in 1856, Mr. Stucky was the son of Dr. Christian Frederick Stucky, of Berne. In the early 1880's, he and his seven brothers came with their parents to America.

After spending a few years in southern Ohio, Mr. Stucky went to bustling, pioneering Pittsburgh, and at the age of 12 began serving his apprenticeship in the pharmacy of F. H. Eggers, in old Allegheny City.

At 21 Mr. Stucky struck out for himself and opened the first system of chain drug stores in Pittsburgh, one of the first in America. He also was president of the Argonne Manufacturing Co., one of the first concerns to use the by-products of petroleum.

Sold Tobacco, Candy.

Mr. Stucky sold prescriptions as physicians ordered them. He sold tobacco to the veterans of the Civil War, and candy to their children.

It was in the gas-lit '90's that a young writer roomed above one of Mr. Stucky's stores. The writer was O. Henry, who had not yet achieved fame as the author of "Hearts of the West," "In Old Arizona," "The Four Million" and his other works.

Mr. Stucky came to know O. Henry through one of his pharmacists, who had befriended the struggling writer. More than once in those days he gave O. Henry articles on credit.

When the panic of 1893 swept Pittsburgh, Mr. Stucky lost everything. But he went into Beaver County, Pa., in 1897 and opened a chain of drug stores in New Brighton and Beaver Falls.

Wife Noted Singer.

The girl Mr. Stucky married early in his career was one of Pittsburgh's noted sopranos in the days of the early opera houses. She is the former Pauline Lemmer, who survives him. She became his bride after she returned from six years of concert, operatic and church singing in Germany.

Besides his wife, Mr. Stucky is survived by his only daughter, with whom he lived, and his son-in-law, Thomas C. Billig, senior attorney in the office of the general counsel of the Social Security Board. Three grandchildren, Thomas Clifford Billig, Jr., Emil Frederick Stucky Billig and Paul Lemmer Billig, also survive.

Last rites for Mr. Stucky will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in Grace Reformed Church, Pittsburgh. Burial will be in Allegheny Cemetery.

Mrs. Nelson Rites Are Set for Today

Funeral services for Mrs. Maria Bruce Matthews Nelson, who died Wednesday night in her apartment at Gunston Hall, 1904 Florida avenue, will be held at St. Margaret's Episcopal Church today at 3:30 p. m. The body will then be sent to Atlanta for burial Saturday. Services in Atlanta will be held at All Saints' Episcopal Church, with Bishop Harry H. J. Mikell and the rector, the Rev. W. W. Meminger, officiating.

Mrs. Nelson, widow of the Right Rev. Cleland Kinloch Nelson, died after a brief illness. She never completely recovered from injuries suffered in an automobile accident five years ago.

Born in La Plata, Md., Mrs. Nelson lived in Atlanta with her husband until his death 15 years ago. At that time she came to Washington to live with the family of the late Mrs. William Beverly Mason. Bishop Nelson's sister, at Gunston Hall.

She is survived by several brothers, sisters, nieces and nephews.

C. E. Schooley, Mail Executive, Is Dead at 63

Rites Set for Saturday for Veteran Official of Postoffice.

Funeral services for Clarence E. Schooley, 63, who died yesterday at his home, 1766 Lanier place, will be held at 1 p. m. Saturday at the Metropolitan Episcopal Church, Sixth and A streets northeast. The Rev. Dr. John Compton Ball will officiate.

Mr. Schooley, superintendent of mails of the city postoffice for the past 17 years, began his postal career as a substitute mail carrier in 1901. He served in that capacity for 2½ years and in 1904 was appointed a regular carrier. In 1910 he was transferred to the clerical force and made foreman of carriers.

In 1913 he became foreman of the delivery division and two years later, superintendent of carriers. In 1920 he was appointed superintendent of mails—a position next in rank to assistant postmaster.

Coming to Washington in 1895, Schooley took a job as a wagon driver for a dairy. During the blizzard of 1898-99 he drove the first four-horse team that broke through to deliver milk in Mount Pleasant.

During his service in the Postoffice, Schooley saw the delivery expand beyond the District lines into nearby Maryland and Virginia. At the time he was appointed superintendent, the Postoffice had about 50 horse-drawn wagons for collecting and delivering mail.

A past master and trustee of National Lodge, No. 12, F. A. A. M.; a member of Columbia Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.; and a member of Adoniam Council, he was long interested in masonic affairs. He was in addition, a member of the finance committee of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, and of the board of the Baptist Home for the Aged.

He was the father of William E. Schooley, assistant treasurer of the American Security & Trust Co., and John H. Schooley, assistant manager of the Twentieth street and Pennsylvania avenue branch of the Hamilton National Bank.

Besides his sons, Schooley is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lizzie Tiffany Schooley, and two daughters, Mrs. Elsie M. Reidy and Miss Ruth E. Schooley. Both daughters are in the Government service.

An Alternative to Strikes.

The readiness with which the Chrysler Corporation has agreed to meet representatives of the Automobile Workers Union throws little light on the attitude of its management toward collective bargaining. It merely indicates that the company, warned by the experience of General Motors, prefers to negotiate with the union rather than risk a strike of its employees.

Nevertheless, the element of compulsion involved in the decision to confer with the union leaders does not destroy the value of the concession. The advantages of collective bargaining as an alternative to industrial strife can only be demonstrated by giving it a trial. And the stubborn refusal of many large employers of labor to make that trial has heretofore stood as a barrier to progress.

In England where the system of collective bargaining is firmly entrenched, employers not only have no objection to negotiating with representatives of the workers but often insist upon dealing with organized groups as a protection to themselves. Too few corporation managements in this country have advanced far enough in their thinking to appreciate the importance of building up responsible labor organizations for such measures. On the other hand, the Chrysler Corporation has no assurance that it is about to negotiate with labor leaders who represent a majority of its employees.

The impotence of the National Labor Relations Board, due to its uncertain legal status, has deprived us of much needed machinery for determining the representative character of bargaining units. Until some way of impartially determining the identity of those entitled to speak for the majority is found collective bargaining will never be entirely protected against the assaults of a determined well organized minority.

Brazen Irony.

Jules Verne was a better guesser than his contemporaries. But because most of his guesses have fallen so far short of reality, posterity has heaped on him as much ridicule as honor. It is not only that the airplane and submarine high-tailed him before they became commonplace but Mother Necessity's precocious child daily gibes at him. Thus we see in one issue of a newspaper two such dissimilar inventions as a mining bug and a grocery automaton thumbing noses at him.

The mining bug is a steel contraption that chews its way through solid ground and makes possible, the modern dreamers say, the straight trip to China which was ever a fancy of childhood. The grocery automaton assembles your purchases on a moving belt and makes out your bill while they are being wrapped.

There are some old fogies in the world who do not want to go to China by way of a tunnel, for fear it will be as boring as it sounds. There are even a lot of sentimentalists who prefer a chatty grocery clerk to any amount of efficient automatic service and who continue to have a liking for Verne because they can close the book when they tire of him.

But such persons have no place in a really progressive society. Bring on your bugs and automatons!

Dr. Townsend's Contempt.

Few will wish to challenge the court decision which found Dr. Francis E. Townsend guilty of contempt. Without a doubt, he did flout the House committee appointed to investigate his Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd. To have tolerated such an action would have been to reduce Congressional inquiries to a farce.

The morality of the case, however, is not so clear. Cynics have maintained that Dr. Townsend's walk-out was a clever strategy designed to advertise the pension plan. But testimony brought forward at his trial could not support this theory. It is easier to believe, instead, that he was goaded into quitting the Congressional hearings last May simply because of what he termed, with no little justification, the "unfriendly and unfair" attitude of the committee members.

The investigation bore a strong resemblance to an inquisition. It was plain from the beginning that the principal purpose of most of the Bell committee members was to place Dr. Townsend and his plan in as ridiculous a light as possible. The doctor was maneuvered into one fatuous position after another until finally, when he attempted to present his own exposition of his scheme and was denied that privilege, he burst from the room in a temper and refused to return.

Many citizens who have no sympathy whatever with the O. A. R. P. nostrum were inclined to resent the persecution of its sponsor by a Congressional committee. In trying to heap ridicule upon the deluded Californian the committee lost its own dignity. If the revolving pension plan had not already been collapsing of its own absurd weight, the committee's discourtesy might well have swung some public opinion to its support, simply out of a sense of irritation at the committee's unreasonable conduct.

Neglecting The Slums.

Senator Wagner's new housing bill represents a long step in advance of the policy now being pursued. It is also a notable improvement upon the measure accepted last year by the Senate. With respect to both slum reclamation and large-scale housing construction, however, it leaves much to be desired.

One significant change would be the shift of responsibility for public housing to local agencies. Instead of authorizing Federal organizations to erect and manage housing projects, as the PWA and the Resettlement Administration have done, this measure would operate chiefly through loans and grants to municipal and State agencies and limited dividend corporations. Direct construction by the proposed United States Housing Authority would be restricted to demonstration projects that would be ultimately turned over to local units.

Efforts have likewise been made to prevent competition between subsidized projects and private building, to eliminate the present confusion resulting from the activities of unco-ordinated Federal housing units, and to reduce to a minimum the drain upon taxpayers' money. When these constructive features are analyzed along with the worthy objective of the bill it may well attain more favorable consideration than previous public housing measures have done. Still extensive amendments appear to be necessary if the bill is to serve the purpose outlined in its general statement of policy.

One obvious defect is the failure to concentrate the program upon slum reclamation. The bill makes provision for "slum clearance" but low-cost housing projects could go forward without relation to any demolition of blighted areas. Since it is much easier to erect new developments on vacant land than to await the slow process of property condemnation, clearance and careful planning of run-down sections, the measure as it stands would probably result in large-scale construction without much improvement in the wretched living conditions at which it is theoretically aimed.

This weakness in the bill comes emphatically to the fore when its generous subsidies for low-cost housing are considered. Initial construction of such dwellings would not be subsidized. But the authority would be permitted to enter into contracts with local housing agencies guaranteeing "fixed and uniform annual contributions." These contributions could not exceed "the carrying costs of the loan" over a period of 60 years.

In other words, the housing authority might lend a municipal agency funds to build a low-cost housing project, and then grant it an annual allowance sufficient to pay back the loan in 60 years. Senator Wagner says that this subsidy would not exceed 45 per cent "measured in terms of effect upon reducing rentals." That would be a very generous allowance, especially where it involved no slum reclamation.

If the Federal Government is to spend $1,000,000,000 on housing, it should certainly be devoted to elimination of the country's worst slums. Under the Wagner proposal the chief benefits would probably go to families in need of better housing, but not to the lowest income groups. It seems axiomatic that when such benefits are contemplated they should be reserved for the distressed families who are least able to care for themselves.

Presumably the authors of this measure are more interested in stimulating immediate building activity than in abolishing slums. If that is the case, they might profitably turn to the stimulation of private construction activities, and reserve whatever public funds are available for the slow but essential work of wiping out disease-infested and crime-ridden areas that are a liability to every large American city.

The Bruce Magruder.

It is the nature of man to give a name to everything he loves: his horse, his dog, his boat, his house. And when he gives a name he wants to hold on to the subject of the christening. Once on a time he gave a name to his car and the older it grew the more affectionately he spoke of it. He has grown a little callous about the car nowadays. If possible he gets a new one every year and turns in the old one without compunction. The old one, you see, hasn't any name. He didn't have it long enough to make it worth while. If he had ever given it a name he would probably keep it.

And so there is significance in the new service custom inaugurated by the Sixty-sixth Infantry at nearby Fort Meade. The Sixty-sixth is the only tank regiment in the Army and proud of its distinction. The commander, Col. Bruce Magruder, has been ordered to another post and as a farewell honor the regiment decided to name its latest tank for him. Accordingly Mrs. Magruder broke a bottle of champagne over the front armor plate; the regiment's oldest bugler blew "To the Colors;" the company commander gave the signal to start motors; the starters whined, the motors roared, and the platoon broke into column and moved off. Henceforth the new tank will bear the name "Bruce Magruder" on a bronze plaque on the turret.

That's only the beginning. The regiment, thus far, has decided that a tank shall be named for every colonel the regiment knows. And that's all right as far as it goes. But it doesn't go far enough. You'll find that every darned tank in the outfit is going to have a name from this time on, official or unofficial, bronze plaque or none.

The answer to Shakespeare's "What's in a name?" is "Just everything."

The Neutrality Bills.

The respective House and Senate neutrality bills now reported out of committee, though differing somewhat in the measure of discretionary power they would vest in the Chief Executive, bear a distinct family resemblance.

The Pittman bill, while far less drastic in limiting war-time trade than the more forthright mandatory neutrality advocates would have it, nevertheless completely binds the hands of the President to a specific course of action following the outbreak of war abroad. In this particular the McReynolds bill favored by the House Foreign Affairs Committee is more generous to the Chief Executive. It permits him a certain amount of leeway in the application of some provisions. But this difference is not to be exaggerated. To a very large extent, both in text and outlook, the McReynolds and Pittman bills are like two peas in a pod.

Both measures would continue the existing prohibitions on the sale of arms, munitions and implements of war to all belligerents. Both favor a "cash-and-carry" policy with regard to war-time trade in essential commodities. Both would extend the provisions of the law to civil strife in any country when such a conflict is of a magnitude and is conducted under such conditions as to "threaten and endanger our peace." Both would bar the purchase by Americans of the bonds and other obligations of belligerent powers.

The two measures are also alike in other particulars. Where they differ is in the fact that the McReynolds bill would permit the President to decide whether restrictions on trade in essential raw materials and other commodities is "necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace of the United States." Such restrictions would, furthermore, be subject to limitations and exceptions the Chief Executive might prescribe. The Pittman bill, on the other hand, would prohibit the President from making such exceptions and give him only limited discretion in deciding when the "cash-and-carry" system should come into force. But both measures specifically provide that any restrictions shall apply equally to all belligerents.

In this particular the McReynolds bill will hardly satisfy those who believe in a discretionary policy. Were the President truly endowed with discretionary power it would be possible for him to act as circumstances might warrant, in accordance with the spirit as well as the letter of the Kellogg Pact, of which this Nation was the principal sponsor.

True discretionary power vested in the President would, in other words, enable the United States at least to refrain from interfering, actively or passively, in any collective attempt to penalize a nation which has violated that pact.

As it happens, neither bill shows any intention of permitting such a measure of discretion to the President. Indeed, in one particular they both go out of their way to strike a blow at collective action. For each bill stipulates that while its provisions are not to apply to American republics, they are to go into force in the event that an American republic is co-operating with a non-American state or states in a war.

Should the League of Nations, for instance, ever decide to apply military sanctions against an aggressor, its Latin-American members would then have to choose between evading their commitments under the Covenant and being penalized by the United States for living up to their pledges.

Tired Democracies.

Matthew Wolf is Reviewer of Reviews. Dictatorships are the outgrowth of tired democracies—of men and women who relinquish control over their own destinies because of their difficulties or disillusionment with the machinery of popular government. It should be an object lesson for us all. We must not grow faint-hearted; we must not permit a divorce to separate areas of activity where democracy can function. To assert that democracy is good in government and bad in industry is a basic denial of our faith.

In many lands the state has stepped in to do what capital and labor might have done if each had shown its capacity and will to make democracy work. In a swiftly moving world, time waits for no man. Unless democracy can learn to function quickly and effectively, then the threat of dictatorship will increase. There is nothing the state can do in the area of capital and labor relations that could not be done better by an enlightened leadership on both sides.

Labor, conscious of its failures as well as its responsibilities, bids capital to make a renewed effort in co-operation with labor to make democracy prevail in history.

Selling Liquor To Drunks.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: I ask space in The Post to remark on a scene witnessed recently of a drunken young woman being dragged from the entrance of one of Washington's swell hotels. She was too drunk to stand, much less to walk, and the uniformed hotel employee had a difficult time holding her up and dragging her to the curb to place her in a taxi. As he reached the street he lost his hold on her and down she fell in the street, and so drunk she was she made no effort to get up. With much exertion the hotel employee got another hold on her and bundled her into a taxi.

It is reasonable to suppose this woman patronized the cocktail room of this swanky hotel and it is reasonable to inquire if the bartender of this cocktail room continued to serve liquor freely to this woman when it must have been evident long before she reached the debauched stage that she was disgustingly drunk.

Is there no limit to sales of liquor, particularly to women, in public places when bartenders can know and see the rapid effect with which it grips some? Are they permitted to serve liquor to the excess that led to the above disgusting spectacle? Every informed and truthful person knows such scenes, both in public and private, are on the increase and are urged to inquire as to where those crusading sisters for repeal of liquor laws are? They claimed to be horrified at the drinking young people and screamed from the house tops their interest in temperance for the young. Knowing as they do the present conditions, they have not raised their voices. Why do they not state what they are doing as promised in the interest of temperance among the youth of the land?

Well, the country knows now to its sorrow how sincere these crusaders were in the interest of temperance. Earnest, honest, sincere, interested people know they were not, and no honest or sincere person could be misled by the true high-toned workers of the great cause of prohibition.

Social Tragedies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently I've seen three plays—"Tobacco Road," "Dead End" and "Mulatto." But I have seen worse real life situations no less dramatic, many of them right here in the shadow of the dome of the Capitol. Say of us who just drive by alleys, where keep out of dead end streets, and who fail to realize the tragedies of race prejudice and intolerance, are affected by these melodramatic portrayals of life, but do very little, or even carry an attitude of helpful sympathy after we leave the orchestra circle.

For an intelligent, cultured Negro to live in the South means for him a life of social sacrifice no less harrowing to soul or spirit than suffer the Jews in Germany. Thousands of Jews and mulattoes cut loose from racial identity yearly. They can't or won't take the gaff. The writer has known personally over 100 mulattoes in the past two decades who have gone from Washington to marry or live as white Americans elsewhere.

Even though Georgia has taken an awful beating in "Tobacco Road" and "Mulatto," one needs but to visit colored schoolhouses and communities—and some white—in many counties in Virginia, where on a basis of per capita wealth the State ranks twelfth of the 48, to find education and social conditions no whit better than in the benighted sections of the "fair South."

Washington should congratulate itself, however, upon being in this instance less provincial than Philadelphia, whose mayor banned the showing of "Mulatto" and "Tobacco Road." Perhaps the heaven of a New Deal is beginning to work.

Concert-goer Asks What Is Music?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Probert's letter under the caption "What Is Poetry?" appeared in your paper the morning after the National Symphony Orchestra's concert of American music, and after hearing the concert I ask in all seriousness—"What Is Music?" It has been finely said that music is "an art aiming at the expression and embodiment of an ideal of beauty." But if one of the pieces we heard on Wednesday is music, the definition is wrong.

From the earliest times the charm and power of music have been recognized and recorded from the beautiful Greek legend of "Orpheus" whose magic "made the trees and mountain tops that freeze bow themselves when he did sing" to the other legend of the musical contest between Apollo and Marsyas, in which the latter lost and was rewarded by being flayed alive.

Roughly, appreciation of music is of three kinds—the senses, the intellect and the imagination. Enthusiasm can be observed in the untutored savage who is exhilarated by the rhythmic beat of the tom tom. All of us, at times, find ourselves nodding the head or tapping the foot at the lilts of a Strauss waltz, but it is a bad habit. The tune of a melody may be so beautiful that ignorant and learned alike are charmed. One may be dazzled by chromatic harmonies or the gorgeous colors of orchestral tone, but this enjoyment alone is akin to that derived from hearing the portal of the Holy of Holies, and the scenery, costumes, and action may be admired and may be interesting, but what does it all mean?

Intellectual enjoyment is to be found in the appreciation of the beauty of the language of music. The word language being applied here to the harmony, the part-writing, form and instrumentation. What wonders Palestrina wrought with his chords, prepared discords, and imitation? When Monteverdi started the punning of his day by the use of the most common of discords, the unprepared dominant seventh, he opened a new vista to the gaze of the musical ear. Philip Emmanuel Bach and Haydn, when they invented and fixed the form of the sonata and symphony, still further extended the boundaries of the musical kingdom, and Wagner developed the possibilities of orchestration and dramatic art to such an extent as to discover a new world.

These things were enjoyed with the senses and it was found that their further appreciation required in addition the use of the intellect, and behind everything there remained the "Ideal of Beauty." In searching for and finding the "Ideal of Beauty," one searches for and finds one's conception of the poetic intent of the composer. Beethoven said of his Pastoral Symphony that it was "More an expression of feeling than a painting." It did not profess to be programme music, but expressed the thought and ideal of nature.

Dr. Hugo Riemann, the learned analyst of Bach's Wohltemperirte Clavier speaks of No. 4 in C sharp Minor of the first book, as being the portal of the Holy of Holies, and says that the previous Prelude in C sharp Major "suggests a siesta under the shade of leafy trees, or grass fragrant with blooming flowers, and all alive with the hum of insects." The analysis of the piece may be likened by some people to the act of plucking a flower to pieces, but if it means to him what he says, he is no dry-as-dust, but a poet, who amid the natural science of Bach's works finds his "Ideal of Beauty."

The piece to which I refer had no form, no melody, no part-writing, only bizarre noise and it assuredly had no "Ideal of Beauty." It may be analogous to very libretto or libretto, or in other words "the whiff of the whatness."

Communist View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently you printed a letter written by Dr. E. J. Irvine, entitled "Stalin vs. Trotsky" in which a number of charges were made against Stalin, such as being an anti-Semite, arranging a "frame-up" to kill off the old time Bolsheviks, persecuting "old honorable Trotsky," etc.

To begin with, the title of the letter is misleading. It is not a struggle between two individuals but of a terrorist group under the direction of Trotsky against the Soviet people and their government. Realizing that the Soviet government under the leadership of Stalin and the Communist Party has tremendously raised the living and cultural standards of the Russian people, and that the population is overwhelmingly behind the Soviet government and its present leadership, these terrorists didn't even attempt to convince the Russian people of the correctness of their "program." Lacking popular support, they resorted to such tactics as assassination of Soviet leaders, train wrecks, mine explosions and deals with foreign powers. Thus, as a result of their activities, Sergei Kirov, leading Soviet official, and hundreds of workers were killed. These facts were admitted by the terrorists on trial.

But the letter states that the "old honorable Trotsky," from his refuge in Mexico, condemns these trials as a frame-up. However, the hundreds of Russians and foreign diplomats and newspapermen who followed the proceedings of the trial didn't think so at all. Men like Mr. N. P. Prit, British lawyer and member of Parliament, who went to the trial biased against its fairness, expressed himself afterwards "as completely satisfied that the trials were properly conducted and the accused fairly and judiciously treated." But Trotsky some 8,000 miles away, seems to know better.

A fable has been developed that these conspirators were all old revolutionists with spotless records whom Stalin wanted to exterminate. It is strange indeed what a sudden love has developed in the breasts of all the reactionaries for these "old honorable Bolsheviks."

With Jews like Kaganovitch, Litvinov and others in leading government positions and with the Soviet government the only one to make anti-Semitism a crime punishable by imprisonment, the charge of anti-Semitism is utterly ridiculous.

Free Trade In England.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The people of England are coming to their senses. That country attained its supremacy as the greatest of all European powers because of free trade without the stupid interference of tariff walls. Then a reactionary government came into power and with the slogan "Buy British" erected tariff walls around the country in order to stifle foreign trade. So successful has this been that over a thousand sea-going ships are said to be idle, tens of thousands have been thrown out of employment, while the purchasing public is compelled to pay artificially high prices for everything.

Now comes the refreshing news of a popular movement demanding free trade not only for the commercial advantage to be gained thereby, but for the more important reason that international free trade is the strongest of all influences for international peace and good will. And it is of peculiar significance that this movement includes in a monster petition to Parliament not only many members of the House of Commons and the House of Lords, but also 13 bishops.

Evidently the church in England is arriving at the conclusion that prayers for peace alone will not suffice, that the Lord helps those who have intelligence enough to help themselves, and that the stupidity and evil effects of tariff walls must be done away with in order to make room for the Kingdom of Heaven for which churchmen so devoutly pray.

HENRY WARE ALLEN.

Cairo In 1881

The following, from the pen of Richard L. Strout, is reprinted from the Christian Science Monitor.

CAIRO felt, even then, that some day it would be famous. It was a town to be proud of, a growing, bustling town. Up and down the Mississippi, up and down the Ohio, steamboat captains talked of the thriving little city at the confluence of the two rivers; the city that marked the southernmost tip of Illinois where the State thrusts into the South, 180 miles below St. Louis.

Queer, what tricks memory plays. Just a line or two in yesterday's paper and last night's Bal Bohème at the glittering Hotel Mayflower in Washington (of all things) has sent memory rushing back to those leather-covered diaries on the top shelf of the library. They were all written in Cairo, every one.

The year is 1881. Steamboats are padding up the river. Railroads are pushing into the bustling town. Some day, people say, the name of Cairo will be famous everywhere. Yes, great events here will be front-page news in St. Louis and Chicago, maybe even New York and Boston, home of culture. True there are floods, but the dikes are strong. A boom is under way and people expect a population of 10,000, or maybe twice that number in a year or two, and the Singer Sewing Machine Co. has just established a plant. You can tell that Cairo is growing by the new opera house, completed this year, with its exquisite $500 drop curtain. "East Lynne" will be played here soon.

Ah, me! It is the day of youth and hope. The Civil War is a dozen years behind, industry is booming in the North and Cairo, former depot for military supplies, is turned into Cairo, mistress of the mighty rivers. It is a day to be young in, to be, if possible, a member of the Cairo High School senior class, a day of carriages, silk parasols, painted fans, the last of the hoop skirts, flannel petticoats in winter, japacons pinned to dresses at the throat; for the long, long thoughts of youth looking out across the rippling stretches at the big stern-wheelers pushing up against the Father of Waters.

What does last night's Bal Bohème know of romance? Dear me; how can such modern affairs compare with the grand promenade at Hartman's Hall; or at the Halliday House; the quadrilles, the gallops, the racquets, the lancers! And progress, why Cairo got its street cars in 1881; yes, air—an "up" car and "down" car, and if you wanted to go from Poplar to Seventh street, you hailed the driver as he passed, or just shouted "Whoa!" Those were the days! Elmer and Mabel "swung on the gate" till after 10 to the small of hocks; there were excursion trips on the tug to Mound City; a reception on the City of Cairo on her maiden trip with the moonlight on the hurricane deck, the spluttering far-bellows, the darkies singing "Cruel Slavery Days," Capt. Shields' speech, the smell of the white camellias, and the hyacinths, yes hyacinths, worn in the hair.

You talk about costumes at last night's Bal Bohème; tush, my dear girl! Give me the Halliday House or Hartman's Hall!

The grand promenade was lovely, gorgeous, funny, bewildering: Amazon queens, fairies, knights, fat boys, Scotch girls, and chiefs, ah—"and the booths were elegant." Elegant was the word. Whittier's "Snow Bound" had a slanting roof and icicles hanging from it, a leaping (artificial) fire in the grate, tea kettle, old silver, andirons, and goodness knows what. There was one icy cavern glittering with stalactites and icicles. But I must dress. Good-night!

And then the compliments fittingly recorded in the diary. How "The dress was lovely—and so pretty and becoming by gaslight," and the new clothes from Chicago! Pangs, too—for Edith has two new dresses, a silk parasol, silk mitts and new boots from Chicago—above all a new bonnet, which is not a poke, and has no strings to it—"The people of Chicago just hoot at strings under the chin, they won't think of them." But we know, alas, that our bonnet lies under the chin; and hoot-toity, aren't they worn that way all over the Union?

That was Cairo of 1881.

Movie Progress.

Three dimensional movies in natural color soon are to become realities, according to Will H. Hayes, czar of the industry. To date we have two only—length and breadth but no depth except that which is imagined. Today's screen is flat. Czar Hayes foresees the day when a street scene or a view over an expanse of water, on the screen, will be as realistic as looking down Euclid avenue, or at a neighbor on Lake Erie. The distance will be there right on the screen.

As for color, Czar Hayes says it "plays an important and continuous part in our lives. It is another element of vivid dramatic presentation. It is a stroke of realism which eventually must mean much to motion picture appreciation. We will learn not only how to achieve the highest form of naturalness in colors and color combinations but also the most effective manner of their use."

Rush Act.

ONE THING I can't get about all this ribbing and needling of the nine old men is the assumption that a lawyer to be eligible for the big bench must never make any progress in his line but remain an office hack in stolen sleeves and a green visor or content himself with hanging around a police court to defend a casual clientele of peddlers, street walkers and drunks and disorderlies.

From all that I have read about the ball club there in Washington—and my reading includes a second ride on the Bob Allen-Drew Pearson Merry-Go-Round—there seems to be great contempt for the nine old men because they first became successful lawyers.

As such, a lawyer naturally finds himself in demand by big firms, such as railroads and banks, which have plenty of money to spend on big interests. And, of course, he takes the work just as an actor takes the opportunity to move out of the back room of some saloon known as the Chez Goldfarb or the Lido Mulligan, where he is putting in his nights slinging some poor skinny wisp around, and sell his soul to Hollywood at $3,000 a week. Under the rules which governed the contest while the present generation of adults were growing up in this country that was the regular thing to do.

Horatio Alger—whatever he may have been—was a more significant writer than we have ever realized or, anyway, admitted. He was our Kipling, so to speak, and, though he told the same story over and over, it was to a whole generation of Americans the sweetest story ever told.

The success story of the post-war Republican era were only whitening splinters of Horatio's one idea, and, looking about the present scene, I notice a few individuals who are personally imbued with the same ambition—which is to get up there near the top.

ANYWAY, I know that the rules haven't been changed and that people are still scrambling and tussling to get ahead in the law, journalism, politics and every other line, just as the nine old men did. Writers will write to get ahead, and write to specifications, too.

But there is no Supreme Court in the writing business in which a man can put himself away on the cushions for the rest of his life, so some go to the movies, some to the copper companies or Standard Oil and some make a permanent good thing out of railing at social ills. There is gold in them, illis podner, and dough in the medium of exchange for groceries and baby buns.

I still don't see anything very wrong with the ball team. Those old men have their little vanities and petty personal foibles, but they shouldn't count unless you are going to take testimony under oath from all the wives of all the people who gloat over these personal peculiarities and make direct comparisons. Everybody has these ordinary or silly little traits, and if old Mr. Taft had a leaning toward pompous splendor, then what is it that makes the common man move out to the suburbs and join a golf club and his wife sling a cocktail-bridge on the patio as soon as they get enough money? I think that trait in Mr. Taft only shows that he was one of us, and as for Mr. Hughes and his inconsistencies, I can show you more inconsistencies in the writings of everyone who has had him in the grease and even more suspicious ones in the record of Mr. Roosevelt.

NATURALLY, a man who has been a corporation lawyer by way of proving his proficiency in the law will come to the Supreme Court with at least a reasonable mind toward the corporate interests which he has pleaded in the courts. What a liar he would have to be, one way or the other, if he were not so disposed!

But what are you going to do? Select a lot of venal old bums to outvote the nine, or an equal number of judicial tankers to go into the water at the word of command from a man in the White House.

And yet I don't think it would be illegal to do as the President demands. But I go back to the time when prohibition was slipped over this country in the absence of the A. E. F. It was finally agreed that this had been a dirty trick. And I think it is indicative of Franklin's way that he didn't mention it while the people had a chance to vote yes or no, but sprung it as a duck act when we were trying to tie our shoe, pluck a rush and change the baby all at once.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

When the Duke Arrives.

The Duke of Windsor and Mrs. Simpson may come to America on their honeymoon. If they do it will mean the biggest reception since Lindbergh's return and rate well up with given Pershing and Bobby Jones. It may even equal Gertrude Ederle's.

We can picture the greatest newsreel picnic in the history of our country:

1.—American newspapers begin devoting columns to plans of the happy couple to visit America.

2.—With approach of their sailing date, the papers relegate trivial matters such as reorganization of Supreme Court to Page 7.

3.—As the Duke and his bride reach mid-ocean they capture the entire front pages. Even John Lewis has to look around among the medicine ads for his name.

4.—Duke and bride near Ambrose lightship and newspapers at this point refuse to be bothered by a Roosevelt message to Congress, the resignation of four Supreme Court justices and a sit-down strike in 42 industries.

5.—Special harbor rules announced to avoid chaos among excursion boats bound to meet the happy pair. Tugs bearing officers and crew are ordered to keep to right and left steamers bearing officers from literary agents pass.

6.—Camera, periscope, toy balloon, souvenir and peanut sales reach new 1937 high.

7.—Metro-Goldwyn company uses to eject Paramount from exclusive rights to Battery Park. Warner Brothers lease on waterfront is contested by Famous Players.

8.—Former Mayor Walker sends greetings to a fellow Britisher.

9.—The Duke and Wally are taken from the liner in a state of exhaustion due to attempts to obey orders of the camera and newspaper men. Edward begins to wish he hadn't quit throne.

10.—Happy couple land and are trampled on by well-wishing mob.

11.—Wally gets lost in crowd, but Edward moves up Broadway still uncertain whether it's a reception or another fall from a horse.

12.—Wall street clerks dump 65 tons of rubbish from windows, assuming it's a Democratic landslide or something. Duke opens eyes and asks, "Where is Wally?" Reception committee asks, "What Wally?" (By this time everybody is mixed up.)

13.—700 women and children hurt in riot caused by a shout of "Hooray for Stanley Baldwin!"

14.—Banquets, receptions, fires and new cocktails break out all over New York. Duke locates Wally. Finds she has been named Miss America, Queen of the Mardi Gras and Lady Windsor Number One.

15.—After four days of welcome in New York, Edward consults secretary and finds the worst is ahead of him in scores of other American cities. Begins to suspect it's all the work of that bishop!

Tenors.

These tenors have a lovely voice. In ringing tones they cry "Rejection!" With melting notes they sing of love. And all the themes poets warble of.

Their voice is magic, but for that they make queer mugs and run to fat. But I don't care, for I am wise. And when they sing I shut my eyes.

Brazil's Outlook

South American Republic Seen Welcoming Revival Of Old Friendships With U. S. Following Conference.

By Guillo Luis.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Rio de Janeiro.

IT WAS NOT in any misapprehension concerning the status of Brazil, after Buenos Aires, that inspired President Dr. Getulio Vargas to dispatch Dr. Jose Carlos de Macedo Soares, former Foreign Minister, as special good-will ambassador to the United States. Brazil was profoundly impressed by the visit of President Roosevelt to Rio de Janeiro on his way to Argentina.

Brazilians of all classes are welcoming the renewal and strengthening of old friendships with the United States. The new Brazil-United States trade treaty has been in operation for nearly two years, and there is a feeling of great security in the assurance that comity in commerce will continue.

Brazil, during the past two years has been enjoying a resurgence of agricultural prosperity, and industrial progress is becoming marked, particularly in textiles. In the past couple years there has been a general improvement in conditions.

Dr. Jose Carlos de Macedo Soares is a Brazilian prototype of the intellectual in political life. Widely known as a scholar, he is representative of that group descended from "first families" which long has been identified with liberal thought in Brazil.

John Of Portugal Landed In Rio In 1808.

WHEN the ascendancy of Napoleon, subjugation of the Spanish people and peninsula was effected, the position of the Portuguese as allies of England was made untenable. Dom Joao, as King John of Portugal, with an escorting English fleet fled his country to take refuge in his colonial empire of Brazil, and in 1808 set up his capital in Rio de Janeiro. Members of his court, families and retainers to the number of 15,000 accompanied him, giving a great addition to the Portuguese population already in this western dependency.

But Napoleon deposed after Waterloo and House of Braganza restored to the throne of Portugal. Dom Joao returned, leaving in Brazil as regent his son Dom Pedro. Already there was in Brazil a large Portuguese population of native Brazilians, and the young regent soon adopted himself to the aspirations of those who were so remote from the mother kingdom. It was not too hard, then, for Brazil in 1815 to declare for a constitutional form of government and Pedro I became constitutional emperor. In 1831 he abdicated to his son, Dom Pedro II, and it was this monarch who reigned until 1889, when the United States of Brazil was established without much ado.

From the time that King John came from Portugal, nearly a century and a half ago, there has been a sort of benevolent control in Brazil, centered in a minority numbering many thousands in the total population of more than 45,000,000 scattered over an area much larger than the United States. It is this minority, descended largely of the original Portuguese exploring, pioneering, trading settlers who preceded Dom Joao's advent, and the more hardy courtiers who fitted the part of the Portugal from whence they came with the requirements of the New World environment, that is cultural, commercial and political Brazil.

STRIFE in which Brazilians have engaged has been very largely a family affair, and generally the country has gotten along with less warfare than others of the larger South American republics. Once the English finished up with Napoleon and there was no further intrigue to embroil South American aspirations with Spain, during that period when wars between English and Spanish were rife, the Portuguese in Brazil, Portuguese only in race and language, but long claiming nationality as Brazilians, consolidated their position, first to the kingdom and empire and then the new world affairs with any predetermined loyalties to any European country or origin of her peoples. There is something that makes the Brazilian of Italian or German or other extraction first a citizen of Brazil, then a Paulista or Catheriniano, according to his state. It is this factor that makes Brazil more assimilative than any other South American nation.

It is, for instance, this sort of environment in which some 200,000 Japanese are living, about 95 per cent as farmers. So quickly have the vast areas swallowed the sons of Nippon that a sort of lingua franca, part Portuguese, part Guarani, part Japanese, is in some parts in general use, something to one who has seen Japanese colonized in other lands seems marvelous.

Brazilians Described As Quick Politically.

AND BRAZILIANS, of all American peoples, are perhaps the quickest minded politically when it comes to shaping a course in comity and comfort with neighbor nations. It is not a mercenary attitude, for there is always a sense of soundness in their appraisals, and it must be borne in mind that in the diplomacy of intercourse they spring from a people who have lived and carried a culture for centuries into all corners of the world.

For instance, Dr. Macedo Soares, now on diplomatic mission to the United States, in his book, "Brazil and the League," presents this: "That the organization of the League has remained political in character, no one will deny. When the Argentine Republic claimed that all the nations upon the Council were equal—still admitting that principle—it must always be subject to political correctives."

"Reduced to ultimate terms, the League is the material outcome of a phenomenon which emerges clearly—clashes and reconciliations of rights and duties of the great powers, members of the League council."

In sending Macedo Soares as his personal ambassador to the Washington capital, President Vargas envisioned the newer trade relations, the rights and duties of men, landed in his characterizing of Wilson. Macedo Soares may be quoted from his published writings, as:

"In the exercise of his duties as leader, Wilson naturally extended his moral authority beyond the rule of law, man-made regulations, free his first campaign for President he had two main objectives: (1) Strengthen the executive powers of the President; (2) extend the rights of the people at the expense of the authority of its representatives."

"Had his ideas gained acceptance there would have been in the United States only two—parallel—political forces, viz: The American people possessing all rights and the President of the republic armed with all powers."

"Sign Of Decay."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It may well be that the whole of the Court was ultraconservative at a time when a more liberal spirit would have served better ends. The Court has never been at any long period of its existence, however, free from public criticism. In fact, its fundamental aspects, such criticism is not to be entirely deprecated.

There is no sure sign of the fatal decay of thought that apathy on the part of the people to the functioning of their major political institutions. There is a vast difference, however, between this and such a subtle but ominous attack as that launched at the Court by the President as the powerful spearhead of the forces of unrest—a difference that recalls the words of Justice Holmes in earlier days:

"The attacks upon the Court," he asserted, "are merely an expression of the unrest that seems to wonder vaguely whether law and order pay. When the ignorant are taught to doubt, they do not know what they safely may believe."

GEORGE R. FARNUM.
Boston, Mass., Feb. 23.

"Sheer Nonsense."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The printed reports say that it is President Roosevelt and the Democratic majority in Congress that are conspiring to subvert constitutional government. But when we inquire as to the basis for this accusation we discover that it is simply that they are proposing a piece of legislation so manifestly within the express terms of the Constitution and so clearly in accord with repeated constitutional practice that even those that are adept at "torturing the construction of the Constitution" could not but hold it constitutional. To accuse the President and Congress, therefore, of conspiring to subvert the Constitution by their proposed measure is to accuse the Constitution itself of being unconstitutional. And this, I submit, is sheer nonsense.

Moroccan Incident

By

Stephen King-Hall

The Democracies Said No!

ON JANUARY 30 Herr Hitler announced that the era of surprises was at an end. He omitted to mention that not many days had elapsed since he had received a very big surprise in the shape of a "No" from the democratic powers. For the first time since their advent to power in 1933 the Nazis encountered a red traffic light along a path which they intended to pursue—I am referring to the Moroccan episode in the middle of January.

As I write these words the lights of Rome are showing up on the horizon, the Paris-Rome express is ending its long diagonal across Europe, and I am one stage further on a tour of investigation which includes Paris, Rome, Malta, Vienna, Prague and Berlin. There has been a lot of misunderstanding abroad concerning the Moroccan incident which was afterwards dashed up in the papers of the right as a scare started by the French. The facts—and these are the facts—were as follows:

The French government received information from three separate and reliable sources that elaborate preparations were being made to accommodate several thousand Germans in Spanish Morocco. They also received news that the gentlemen in question were to be sent by train to a port in Italy. This alarming information reached Paris about five days before the expected arrival of the Germans.

The French prime minister was away from Paris having a brief holiday. He was communicated with by 'phone as was also Mr. Delbos, the Foreign Affairs Minister. M. Blum gave immediate instructions that the German ambassador in Paris was to be sent for and told that if German troops, on their equivalent of a brief holiday, were to be sent to Spanish Morocco they would be pushed out by force. The ambassador was requested to put the matter very plainly to the German leader and "not to wrap it up in diplomatic verbiage."

THESE INSTRUCTIONS were carried out and on receipt of the news from Paris, Herr Hitler called a conference at Berchtesgaden (his chalet in the Bavarian Alps) at which were present the minister for war, the chief of staff and the commander of the army.

The military experts advised Hitler that it was a bad bet and that if the French meant business he'd better call it off. In the meanwhile further proof to the effect that the French were prepared to go the limit was provided by the news that a squadron of German warships had appeared off the northern African coast.

At the same time, although the British government declined an invitation to participate in the naval demonstration, Mr. Eden made it clear in the House of Commons that his majesty's government was not prepared to see German troops in northern Africa. A few days later, at the reception in Berlin to the diplomatic corps, Herr Hitler went out of his way to take the French ambassador by the arm and express his friendliness towards France.

THE VIEW held in Paris is that the psychological effect of this check to German policy has been of great importance. It is thought that its results could be seen reflected in Herr Hitler's speech of January 30 which in many respects was a marking-time pronouncement. It is argued in Paris that the Nazi regime has succeeded like success is equally susceptible of development by the democratic powers and that this incident shows that it is essential for France and Great Britain to stand firm against unreasonable "colonial demands."

Sticky Envelopes

By William Lyon Phelps

A Few Don'ts.

Apparently 50 per cent of letters sent through the post are envelopes gummed up or licked up lightly to both corners. There are several reasons why this is not advisable. First, it is not beneficial to the temper or character of the recipient. Only a few persons have tools ready at hand with which to open letters; they use a finger. I have seen persons vainly clawing, first at one corner, and then at the other corner, trying to insert a finger where it can't go. This is not so agreeable if it contains a check. Sometimes the cursed edge of the envelope cuts the finger, and a paper cut is sharper than a serpent's tooth.

Second, it is not beneficial to the writer. No one in human history has ever yet packed a suitcase, locked or strapped it tightly, without then discovering that something fundamental has been left out, and the bag once more has to be reopened. Well, this often happens with letters. "Enclosed please find" or "I am sending you a little snapshot" and then when you have licked the envelope tightly up to each corner, you discover in front of you on the desk the thing you announced was inside the envelope. So you have to rip the whole thing open again. Now if you had only licked it at the one essential point, it would be easier and more economical to flip it open.

You say this is a trivial matter? Not if you get 50 letters a day. It might add that while the taste of muck is not fatal, it is also not so delicious as to make it profitable to lick across 6 inches when 1 inch is enough to satisfy thirst.

Ohio And The Yangtze

DURING the course of Mrs. Pearl Buck's argument with certain phases of opinion which she encountered upon the mission boards of her church the distinguished author of "The Good Earth" and "The Moon and the Yangtze" wrote a magazine article on the subject of why she was thankful for the influence of the Christian religion. In it she set forth with an amazing insight into human nature the differences which exist from life in those countries where Christianity exists as only a minor missionary enterprise, if indeed it is present at all.

In the barbaric life of the other lands there is now some faint stirring of humanitarian and philanthropic impulses. In the West, however, the Christian land, the most part it is every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. Only in places which derive their culture from the Old Testament or the New do we find the spontaneous outpouring of the desire to help our fellowmen which is so happily apparent at the time of the disastrous Ohio floods.

As Mrs. Buck pointed out, Christian civilization is full of holes and faults, some of them grave, but even so, the unfortunate human beings, the poor, the sick, the old, the distressed, the victims of calamities, stand a chance through Christian civilization of receiving treatment the kindness of which goes far beyond that it is ever gone where that influence had not made itself felt.

Robes of Scarlett

From Atlanta comes a report that a young lady (the word being used intentionally) is being considered for the film role of Scarlett O'Hara. She is described as "a beauty of a girl from which one may judge that she is accustomed to handling a teacup, or its modern equivalent. Since she has not been chosen, her personality is unimportant just now, but her potential responsibility is great. For she, or the New do we find the spontaneous outpouring of the desire to help our fellowmen which is so happily apparent at the time of the disastrous Ohio floods.

The huge sale of the book which has Scarlett as its central character is unprecedented in our generation, and has amazed many persons because they said such a thing could not be done. The cause of the Confederacy, in literature and everything else, was lost, and its return was beyond peradventure. Yet in a single novel, and through the thousand-page adventures of a girl whose character was far from admirable, four vivid years of American history have been brought back with amazing clearness. Soon the South will be judged from a picture, not with absolute accuracy, perhaps, but with more charity than we often display toward our own, from what we think we know of them.

Letters On The Supreme Court

Court Or Congress?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The storm raised by President Roosevelt's proposal to reform the Court seems to have generated very much heat but not much light.

If the Court has constitutional power to void acts of Congress or change them by interpretation so as to affect public policy, it becomes a part of the law-making process, and therefore the President in nominating the judges and the Senate in confirming them, if they accept such doctrine, have all along no doubt concerned themselves with the political and economic views of the nominees. Under the assumption that the judges would exercise legislative power, this "packing" process became not only the natural and human thing to do, but the proper thing to be done.

The trouble seems to have been that the presidency and the Senate in the past were under the control of the conservatives, with the result that a majority of the Court is now conservative. Now that the liberals have the control of the legislative and the executive branches of the Government, they find the Court is not keeping step with the march of liberalism. The conservatives did their "packing" in a slow, orderly way. The liberals, in anticipation of delay, and quick results, desire to do their "packing" in a hurry.

The principle is the same in both cases and both predicated upon the same unsound assumption, that it is the proper function of the Court to take part in the shaping of public policy. Whenever the Court does this, it leaves the judicial sphere, enters into the political arena and loses the prestige and public esteem which naturally belong to the more dignified, nonpartisan judicial function.

The true remedy is to be found in going back to the Constitution that vested all legislative power in Congress subject only to the veto of the President, and giving the Court such jurisdiction in appellate cases as the Court may by its exceptions and regulations might allow. A simple act of Congress could settle the matter and thus relieve the Court of a constantly increasing embarrassment.

The rapidity of increasing complexity of our civilization will make imperative a wider application of the general welfare clause and bring on a flood of cases which, however decided, will lead to increased political strife. If the courts from the highest to the lowest can step in and stop the progress of events it will soon lead to an impasse. The impending problems are political and economic and no court is competent to settle them. The battle must be fought on the political field. Apparently, both sides to the controversy are side-stepping the real issue which is: Shall the public policy of the country be controlled by the Congress or the Court?

A. F. THOMAS.
Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 22.

Law's Standard.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The instances in which the U. S. Supreme Court has upheld the civil rights of unimportant citizens, oftentimes as indicative of its rectitude, may indicate ignorance of the judicial process. "Law" in personam allows discretion from the arresting officer straight through to a pardon by the executive of a State or the Nation, but on the other hand, law "in rem" including money and capital in general, tends to follow precedent. "One promissory note is like another," says Dean Pound.

In "The Growth of the Law," however, says Mr. Justice Cardozo, "the important thing is to determine the principle that shall govern the exceptions. Shall we look for it in the past, admitting no encroachment not sanctioned by time? Or shall we look for it in the needs of the present, in the exigencies of social life?" Shall our standard be a metaphysical conception, or an historic datum, or a living need? Certainly arguments are and can be respecting the President's recommendations for reforms in the federal judiciary, show this divergence in their premise.

Sir Matthew Hale, Chief Justice of England, 1674, wrote: "He that thinks a state can be exactly steered by the same laws in every kind as it was two or three hundred years ago; may as well imagine that the the same laws fitted him when a child should serve him when he has grown a man. . . . As manufacture, mercantile arts, architecture and building, and philosophy itself, secure new advantages and discoveries by time and experience, so much more do laws which concern the manners and customs of men."

CHARLES THOMAS.
Washington, Feb. 22.

No Ax To Grind.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am convinced that the President is not only sincere, but that he has no ax to grind in his intention to relieve the strain on the "nine old men" of the United States Supreme Court.

Furthermore, it is so easy for him to remove doubts of those who may be dubious of his single-mindedness in appointing the six assistant Supreme Court justices. All he has to do to prove fair-dealing is to appoint three Liberty Leaguers and three of his own henchmen to the six positions of assistant Supreme Court justices.

If he does not make these appointments on a fifty-fifty basis the inference is plain.

S. O. LOMON.

For Progress In 1937.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In all the ballyhoo over the crime of increasing the number of Supreme Court justices, the busy correspondents would have us forget what happened to property rights recently in Michigan.

Did they rise up and sound the alarms and the tocsins on a plain violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution? With about two exceptions, they have not, for the Fifth Amendment is fundamental in our law and in the English law, and its open violation should have been protested to high heaven. But was it? No, the Fourth Estate was too busy getting over its Supreme Court propaganda.

Ringling editorials against 15 judges and against "packing the Court" have appeared, but how about a few ringing editorials against the union's violation of basic human rights to property? The voluminous anti-court-change campaign just cracks too much of obvious propaganda. The public isn't quite as glib as it once was; it is for progress in 1937, not for a return to "the good old days" of reactionaries and standpatters.

The Critics' Game.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Once in the House of Parliament, a member excoriated Gladstone unmercifully. Gladstone waited until he had finished and then replied, "The gentleman speaks his own mind, clearly."

We certainly do judge others by ourselves. We are seeing a lot of that just now. And this political game these critics are playing is very apparent. It is one way to get into the limelight for 1940 and they are all playing to that large gallery of poor sports and soreheads that did so much to bring about the greatest Presidential victory of all time. If they keep this up it may be 48 States out of 48 the next time for him.
A. WAYFARER.
Washington, Feb. 22.

A Liberal Bench.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The most unfavorable thing that can be said for the proposed change is that a "liberal" bench is desired; that is, a bench which will consist of a majority of "liberals" as distinguished from a majority of conservatives. I do not use the term "reactionary" as there are probably only two real "reactionaries" on the bench.

Assuming that the bill passed and six liberals were placed upon the bench, it would merely mean that on close questions involving either a liberal or conservative interpretation of the Constitution, the liberal view would prevail. Every lawyer knows that on many constitutional questions there exists a "twilight zone"; namely a field where even the best constitutional lawyers differ as to the intended meaning. In such cases, liberal majorities would control the conclusion, whereas, at the present time a conservative majority controls.

Katharine Cornell Is to Be Signally Honored
At White House Dinner and Reception March 30

The Star of Maxwell Anderson's "The Wingless Victory" Will Receive National Achievement Award Gold Medal With Alexander Woollcott Speaker of Occasion; Francine Larrimore Makes Screen Debut at Capitol Today; Ruby Keeler Afraid of Dialogue; Short Shots, Gossip of Current World of Theater.

THE National Achievement Award gold medal, presented each year to a woman for outstanding accomplishment in the United States, will be bestowed upon Katharine Cornell, according to the announcement made yesterday by the committee on award, composed of Dr. Beatrice M. Hinkle, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President; Mrs. Laura Gardin Fraser, Miss Marjorie Nicolson, Miss Mary Vail Andress and Miss Elizabeth Dyer, and communicated to this desk by that most helpful of theatrical stenographers, Mr. Ray Henderson.

Mrs. Roosevelt will present the medal to Miss Cornell at a dinner to be given in the White House on Tuesday night, March 30, after which a reception will be held, at which that amiable pundit, Alexander Woollcott, will speak.

Dr. Florence Sabin, Miss Cecilia Beaux, Dr. Alice Hamilton, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and Undersecretary Josephine Roche are the only women who have received this medal, Miss Cornell being the first representative of the theater to be so honored. Chi Omega, a national fraternity, sponsors the award.

Miss Cornell will close the Empire Theater in New York, where she is appearing in Maxwell Anderson's tragedy of "The Wingless Victory," the one night only, March 30, in order to come to the National Capital to receive the medal at the hands of the First Lady.

Speaking of Alexander Woollcott, as we were somewhere back there, it is interesting to recall that it was with Francine Larrimore in S. N. Behrman's comedy of "Brief Moment" that he made his debut as a recumbent actor on the stage of the Belasco Theater some years ago. This becomes of interest only because Miss Larrimore this week is making her screen debut opposite Edward Arnold in "John Meade's Woman," chief feature of the screen portion of the program being inaugurated today at Loew's Capitol Theater. Mr. Woollcott's enthusiasm for spreading himself out on comfortable divans has never been equalled, except by Clinton Webb's somnolent performance in the Theater Guild's early season production of "And Stars Remain." The attenuated Mr. Webb seemed less adapted to this sort of reclining art than the rotund and puffy Mr. Woollcott. As between the two, Mr. Woollcott probably makes the better speech, although Mr. Webb, also, is distinctly articulate.

All records for continuous association went by the board this week in Hollywood when Victor Moore, stage and film comedian, and his stand-in, secretary and valet, Maurice Elliott, started their thirty-third year together.

Elliott joined Moore in 1904 as understudy, when the stage's drollest star was in vaudeville.

"And once when the boss had the measles," says Elliott, "I played his lead role in 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway' for three weeks."

Despite his success as a pinch-hitting actor, Elliott preferred to remain in his original capacity with the Alexander Throbbottom of "Of Thee I Sing." That's fidelity for you.

I have intended for a long time now to remark upon the receipt of a letter from the Yacht Club Boys, upon their return from Europe, in which they had many kind things to say about the review of their work that appeared in this space upon the occasion of their appearance in "Pipskin Parade." They are under contract to do three more pictures on the West Coast this year, and hope to get as good a trio of breaks as they received in "Pipskin," in which they were permitted to play parts as well as sing a series of their crazy roundelays. The Messrs. Kelly, Adler, Mann and Kern now are parading their stuff—and it is some stuff—for the edification of the winter vacationists in Miami. I know one guy who writes of the theater who would like to be with them, just for the laughs if not for the sunshine, sand and surf.

Ruby Keeler and Allen Jenkins are together again in the same film for the first time since Miss Keeler's screen debut in "Forty-second Street," the picture that was presented at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater the week of President Roosevelt's first Inauguration. Their new vehicle is "Ready, Willing and Able," opening on the screen at the Earle today.

In discussing their earlier joint enterprise, Jenkins recently remarked, "You certainly were a scared girl. I was afraid you'd never make it a couple of times."

"When the music started, I was all right," Ruby replied, "but the dialogue parts almost got me down. As a matter of fact, I'm still frightened when I start a picture, unless we begin with a dance number."

Now let's wait and see how "Ready, Willing and Able" starts. In this subject Miss Keeler (Mrs. Al Jolson in private life, as, of course, you know) is teamed with a new dancing partner in the nimble person of Lee Dixon who certainly can pick them up and lay them down with the best of them!

It is pleasant to report that Frank V. A. Brown, father of Helen Hayes (Brown) star of "Victoria Regina," one of the substantial hits of last season and this, under the aegis of Gilbert Miller, international producer, is rapidly convalescing from a major operation at Sibley Hospital. Mr. Brown is expected to be able to leave the hospital for his home on Saturday of this week.

Charles Barry, of the Washington Civic Theater, has become a full-fledged announcer on the staff of Radio Station WRC, local outlet of the National Broadcasting Co. Mr. Barry recently played Hildy Johnson in the Civic Theater's production of "The Front Page."

Differing slightly from the story of the play, in which Hildy transfers his talents from newspaperdom to the advertising field, Barry, in real life, has switched from publicity man to radio announcer.

Watching for the Plane to Crash

These young people, one supposes, provide the romantic interest in "Crack-Up," the new film being presented on the screen at the Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning today. The mainstays of the picture's melodramatic interest are Peter Lorre and Brian Donlevy. Mr. Lorre has a peculiar penchant for lending his roles a disturbing and menacing realism; Mr. Donlevy is one of the screen's least exploited but most effective actors.

Plans Snowshoe Trip to Salvage Belongings
From Shack.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Feb. 25.—Bulky Wallace Beery will leave soon on snowshoes to rescue his favorite red flannels from a ruined cabin in the high Sierras.

A land and snow-slide knocked Beery's summer home for a ground loop after wrecking five other shanties on the shore of Silver Lake, 300 miles northeast of here, and scattered the actor's outdoor props to the winds.

Beery flew over the place and reported the $18,000 layout looked like a total loss, less $6,000 worth of insurance. He was unable to land.

He was unworried about salvage until a frost-bitten forest ranger hove into town with a snapshot showing hill-billies of the region lolling in armchairs in the middle of the icebound lake with their feet propped on expensive chiffoniers amid clothing, bric-a-brac and hunting gear strewn by the slide.

Now Beery thinks it's time to pick up the pieces and has persuaded Metro to suspend production of "The Old Soak" to give him a full week-end for the trip.

Plows have opened the road to within 3 miles of the camp. Thereafter it'll be snowshoes, skis or a dog-team.

Tyrone Power must ride a bicycle from Hollywood and Vine to New Orleans before September 1, to win a $100 note from George Marton, visiting former schoolmate.

The matinee idol let himself in for the bet boasting his prowess with wheel and pedal, but vows he'll win, because "I want to make the trip anyway."

Soon as "Cafe Metropole" folds up (about March 15) Power will off to Mexico City to climb Mount Popocatepetl for training. He'll go up on foot, however, fearful of trying to bike up a hill he can't even pronounce.

"Kathy" in "The Student Prince" has been chosen by Metro men as the role to ease Della Lind, blonde Viennese singer, into the Hollywood spotlight.

JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, Feb. 26.—Of all the crooked rackets designed to steal pennies from the pockets of movie hopefuls, none is more insidious (nor more profitable) than the traveling caravans which four small towns, shouting "Opportunity to get into pictures!" A few of these gypsy units have been on the level, but the majority are simon-pure racketeers with no more contact with studios than I have with Il Duce Mussolini, who would not know me from a fried oyster.

These fake troupes usually number five persons. There is a second-rate cameraman, a promoter who is also director, a man of all work who applies makeup, shifts light, moves scenery, and calls himself "first assistant," an advance man who creates fanfare ahead of the unit's arrival, and a woman (generally the wife of the promoter) who acts as leading lady.

The "company" authenticates itself by "producing" a two-reel picture in each town, using home talent. The talent, of course, pays for the privilege of appearing in the cast. The prize plum dangled before eager eyes is the promoter's promise that bright discoveries will be called to the attention of Hollywood. That never happens. Sometimes a local theater will show the picture. Why not? The entire town will turn out to see it. The one showing is generally the first and last.

These units intimate (they never make open statements) that they represent studios. But the operators are cagey enough to put nothing incriminating in writing. There is apparently no way to stop them, and parents of prodigies (the easiest victims) and high school students continue to make this a profitable racket. Because there are several such troupes touring the country constantly, I offer this advice. Before you "pay to play," ask your local theater manager if the company is on the level.

Interesting how Frank Albertson went to New York and landed a leading role in the stage play, "Brother Rat." Frankie has been "of pictures" for years, always on the border of success. Time and again he has given excellent performances that won critic and audience acclaim, yet never quite leaped the barrier between the also-rans and the winners.

He went to Chicago in answer to an invitation to appear on a radio program, and because he was so close to New York, he decided to pay that large town a visit. The night of his arrival he attended a party, and the moment he set foot inside the drawing room, a man looked at him and demanded, "How would you like to play the lead in a show?" The man was George Abbott's casting director. A few minutes later, Abbott himself arrived, listened to Albertson read a scene from the play, and within an hour a deal was struck.

Now (happy ending) Hollywood producers are yapping at the heels of this actor who yesterday was glad to work for $200 a week, but whose new asking price is up into four figures.

Police Combing Argentine Wild In Kidnap Hunt

2-Year-Old Son of Rich Sportsman Taken by Brigand Band.

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Feb. 25. Wealthy and powerful cattle barons of the endless pampas urged hundreds of police into a vast hunt to-night for 2-year-old Eugenio Pereyra Iraola, feared kidnapped from his parents' beautiful estancia. Details of police beat the countryside all day, seeking a trace of the blue-eyed baby, a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families in the land, for some sign of the remnants of a kidnap band once led by the reckless "Pibe Cabeza" ("Baby-face").

Headquarters Fall Seriously Injures District Policeman

Police Private Ralph E. Burton, 32, of 3359 Brothers place southeast, was in a critical condition at Emergency Hospital last night because of the dilapidated condition of the iron railing up the stone steps to headquarters. Finishing his tour of duty yesterday, Burton swung from his parked motorcycle and grasped the railing as he climbed the steps.

Mid-City Citizens Hear Police Aide

Advocating the re-establishment of abandoned precincts, particularly No. 2 between M and N streets northwest, Assistant Superintendent of Police L. H. Edwards declared last night that because police protection in these sections was lacking, crime there was increasing. He spoke at a meeting of the Midcity Citizens Association in the Thompson Community Center.

'Water Tappers' In D. C. Will Get Saturdays Off

Detroit, Feb. 25 (P).—Edward D. Bushnell, 51, authority on counterfeit money, died today at his home here. Secret Service operatives immediately confiscated his personal collection of spurious bank notes, the only one ever licensed by the Treasury Department.

The Four Leads in Film at the Capitol

When "John Meade's Woman" is revealed for the first time in Washington on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning today, the principal roles will be played by the distinguished artists pictured above. They are, reading around the clock, George Bancroft, not seen on the silver sheet for too long; Francine Larrimore, brilliant stage star, making her debut in the celluloids; Gail Patrick, one of the cinema's beauties; and Edward Arnold, who has achieved fame since the days of his local appearances with the National Theater Players. The supporting cast is on a parity with the eminence of the featured players.

Woodring Praises U.S. Army Air Unit For Safety Record

The Army Air Corps was praised for its safety record in a letter sent yesterday to the Chief of the Air Corps by Secretary Woodring. The safety record for 1936 was the best in the Air Corps' history. The accident rate was 0.859 per 1,000 flying hours. A total of 500,704 hours was flown, with an average of one fatal accident for each 12,000 hours.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

What Should the Odds Be?

Determining the merit of a final contract is a difficult matter because many factors have to be taken into consideration. Naturally, the cards are of greatest importance, but the skill of the declarer and of the defenders must also be weighed.

An expert bids a grand slam whenever he thinks the odds favor success by about three to one. Against bad players he shades that to about two to one. But an expert finds three-to-one chances where the average player sees only an even chance. So what would be a good contract for an expert would be a risky one for an average player. Take as an example today's hand:

South dealer. Neither side vulnerable.

♠ A K 7 10 6	♥ 8 4 3	♦ A 7 3	♣ Q 8 4
♠ 9 8	♥ 7 6 5 4	♦ Q J 10	♣ 7 5 2
♠ 7 5 2	♥ K 6 3	♦ K Q J 10 6	♣ A 8
♠ 4 3	♥ A 2	♦ A 2	♣ K 6 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♥	Pass	2♠	Pass
3♥	Pass	4♥	Pass
4NT	Pass	5NT	Pass
7♥	Pass	Pass	Pass

That is the way the hand was bid.

when dealt to four non-expert players. South should have contented himself with bidding a small slam to allow for an error.

West opened the Queen of clubs and South thought things over. He decided to discard his low club on dummy's Queen of diamonds and then bank everything on the spade finesse. When that failed, he said philosophically: "Serve me right for bidding a grand slam on a finesse."

Much as declarer was to be commended for his stoicism, he did not show up very well as an analyst. The spade finesse had nothing to do with his grand slam!

Here is how an expert would have played the hand. After winning the Ace of clubs, the King and Queen of hearts would be laid down, followed by the high diamonds. Then the top spades would be cashed and declarer's last spade discarded on the diamond Queen. A spade ruff would establish the suit with the Ace of hearts as entry. Only then would the losing club be discarded.

By that line of play declarer would make the slam if the spade Queen dropped singleton or doubleton, if the suit broke 3-2, or if East had four or five spades headed by the Queen. And if East failed to follow on the first round, South could still discard a club on the diamond Queen and return to his hand for the spade finesse. Once trumps broke 2-2, declarer had a five-to-one chance. Quite a lot better than a finesse, is it?

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

Miami Beach, Feb. 25. MAJ. ALBERT WARNER and Irving Caesar held a reunion the other night at the roulette tables. It was Caesar who induced Warner to become a winter settler here. Warner had asked the song writer's advice as to where to purchase a winter home. "Look," said Caesar, "a man named Rockefeller, animated by the most generous of impulses, contributed almost a billion dollars to the Rockefeller Foundation. He had a right to ask the world's greatest scientists, who are employed there, to answer one simple question—Where can I go in the winter time to prolong my life? If they had told him Europe, Rockefeller has enough money to build a bridge across the sea. If they had said California, he has enough money to level off the Rockies and construct a road to the Pacific. But their answer must have been Florida. Because he's here." The very next day Maj. Warner and his brother, Harry, purchased their Collins avenue homes in Miami Beach.

PHIL BAKER, a new arrival, is rhapsodizing about the Southern sunshine. "I met a guy I hate," Baker confessed, "and already I love him." Gary Cooper, who observed the huge dice tables to accommodate 50 players, derided the idea. "Tables for 50?" he sneered. "It lacks the personal touch." Lou Holtz, after visiting eight night clubs, all of them jammed to capacity, pointed to the wealthy, sun-tanned patrons and sighed: "Can you imagine? All these people wanted to vote against Roosevelt!"

A HEFTY visitor at the Plumbing Division in the Municipal Hall at Miami Beach leaned against the wall and accidentally displaced a plumbing fixture. Five master plumbers, all experts, are employed in that room. But because their duties are limited exclusively to plumbing inspection work, and not to repairs, they had to summon the building superintendent to repair the defect. The superintendent was unavailable. The repairs finally were made by one of the municipal electricians!

IT HAPPENED at Dempsey's last night during the rush at the dinner hour. The trio wandering from table to table singing and playing for the customers stopped at a table where a wine buyer was seated with four fair ladies. The trio grouped together and sang out in his honor: "Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you." The wine buyer, who was a member of the winning team, was Jerry Kahler—whose profession it is to exhibit at private functions his unique ability to stack a deck of cards!

THE DONALD K. WOODWARDS tendered a reception to the blue-bloods last week. The party featured a bridge tournament for the guests. Mrs. Claire Light, one of the champion bridge players in the Social Register, announced that she and her partner were Culbertson adherents, and by playing that system nobody could defeat them. Her opponents introduced themselves as followers of the Kahler system. When the game was over and the Kahler system triumphed, Mrs. Woodward explained to the losers exactly what the Kahler system is. One member of the winning team was Jerry Kahler—whose profession it is to exhibit at private functions his unique ability to stack a deck of cards!

MISS DOROTHY DEY, who conducts a column for the Miami Tribune, has been exposing a fourth-rate New York paragrapher now faking scoops from this city. "That's silly, the way you pen him every day," Dorothy was advised. "Nobody here has ever heard of him." "Well," Miss Dey retorted, "this is one way of introducing him!"

YONNO COOKE, contemporary of Nick the Greek, supped last night at a gambling cafe. There were five in his party, and their check amounted to $100. "This check won't cost us anything," Yonno promised. "Let's chip in $20 each and I'll take a crack at the dice table." They pooled $100 and delivered it to the Broadway gambler. He walked to the dice table, waited his turn, and rolled. Five minutes later he returned to his table. "Well, Yonno," his colleagues asked, "how'd you make out?" He pointed to the menu and shrugged: "Just make believe we all ate double portions."

Customers' Men Testify to SEC

By the Associated Press.

Customers' men for W. E. Hutton & Co. testified yesterday their activity in Atlas Tack Corporation stock dated from November, 1935, when the Government charges the firm first began "rigging" the market.

The Securities Commission is holding a hearing to determine whether the New York brokerage house should be ousted from exchanges.

U.S. Air Unit Issues New Safety Rules

The Air Commerce Bureau issued regulations yesterday designed to increase safety on the Nation's air lines.

Under the rules, all air transports must have anti-static antenna systems by November 1. The antenna must be protected against rain, snow, sleet, and dust and must be designed for reception of radio range signals, weather broadcasts and emergency messages. Another regulation, effective January 1, 1938, requires installation of radio direction finders.

'No Surprises' But Good Show At Shoreham

Lotus Has Bill Strickland and Capitoli to Supply Music.

By Chanticleer.

The story of the man biting the dog, insofar as it applies to the after-dark business, has finally arrived. It comes from the Shoreham. It says emphatically there are no surprises at the Shoreham.

What is really meant, of course, is that you can always depend on Doorman General Joe's "Welcome home" the beautiful lobby in the French motif; U. S. prime steak and chef's salad; croque Suzette; entertainment carefully chosen by Maxim Lower; rhythmic dance music by Barnee and the orchestra, and between 1 and 2, the One-to-Two Club.

Oh, well. It seems to be the old story of the dog biting the man after all.

They'll tell you at the Lotus that no small factor in making this Chinese-American spot a favorite is the scintillating dance music provided by Bill Strickland and his Capitoli. Between floor shows, the maestro has rounded out more than three years at this rendezvous. And there's Al Norton, too, who writes an original script now and then with the work members taking the parts. Tudell and Gene, dancers, are featured this week against a background of the Paul Florenz Beauties. Also Sherin and Silver in fast taps and Eve and Vivian Dorn, in soft shoe waltz numbers.

Judy Ellington will remain on view at Cocoonut Grove only through next Monday. Better step lively, gents! Incidentally, the Grove now offers dinner from 6 to 10 for $1 with no added cover. Charlie Eclair entertains in intermissions at the electric organ. The customers usually provide the vocal effects.

Boulevard Farms, just below Alexandria on the Mount Vernon highway, would have you know that these snow flurries we are having are just the right atmosphere for chicken dinner in the warm confines of the dining room there. Al Shea and his orchestra play nightly with a very special Friday night lullaby.

The Russian Troika found the birthday anniversary of a great American a very good day for trade. Washington's holiday found the customers paged in. "You may be interested in knowing that the lovely blonde in the bazaar in the Troika's lobby is the wife of George, the headwaiter. And the Cossack at the door is a former wrestler."

Jimmy Byrd advises that since inaugurating a policy of closing at 2 a. m. instead of much earlier, that the anything-goes section of the new policy has produced not a single case of dancing-on-the-tables, as might have been expected. Usually, the entertainers report that the crowds from midnight to 2 are just about the most delightful yet. Lady Inez, the graphologist, is on hand now to tell you all about your past—and your future.

The Sunday Night Club at the Duce Ranch is becoming very popular, with music by the Casa Grande Orchestra and Betty Ann and her guitar.

At the Cocoonut Grove

On the Air Today

The enthusiastic young army of Nelson Eddy admirers will be cheered with news that the young barytone has been signed already for a series of programs next season, Eddy's "Open House" programs will end March 21.

Incidentally, at the moment there is a question as to his ability to appear again this Sunday night. The ailment lingers on and although Eddy himself feels able to sing this week, the maestro in charge of the instrumental portion of the half-hour is urging him to stay out of the studio if there is any doubt whatever about his illness.

In the series just arranged for next fall, Eddy will serve as master of ceremonies, possibly doing a stint not unlike that of Dick Powell in "Hollywood Hotel." It would appear that the program will be of full-hour length, although this is not confirmed in the announcement at hand.

It seems to be reliably understood that "Do You Want to Be an Actor?" will not be renewed when the contract expires March 14. Much speculation is being voiced as to the use of this Sunday night hour, a valuable holding on the airways for any sponsor, between March 14 and June 1.

when the MacQuarrie program folds up, and the beginning of the Eddy series many months away, inasmuch as the sponsor is the same.

Success story: Jack Benny, relatively unknown in 1932 when he was signed for his first radio series, has reached an agreement with his present employers whereby he will be heard for at least three more years, effective next fall after his summer vacation. His present contract runs through June.

Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone, his wife, have established a success record unequalled in any branch of the entertainment industry. Although he was favorably known to vaudeville and revue audiences before coming to radio, Benny was a rank outsider to the sophisticates of the radio listening audience. Early in 1934, two years after his radio debut, he was voted the outstanding comic by radio writers over the country. And each succeeding year has seen him maintain that enviable position—not excluding 1937.

As a matter of fact, the Benny show has been an all-around choice of radio scries for the No. 1 program honor in all categories of air programs. Three years is a long period—and a new contract reflects the confidence placed in the Waukegan boy who began his professional career as a violinist.

Here and there: Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf replaces Phil Lord in "Gang Busters" for the next three weeks, beginning March 3, while Lord vacations. "Broadway Varieties" begins its fifth year on the air this month, with Oscar Shaw, Elizabeth Lennox and Carmela Ponselle, and Vic Arden's Orchestra. Rumors continue that John Boles is being prepared for a place as master of ceremonies in a big new hour program. Al Johnson and "Community Sing" programs on the West Coast conflict in air time. So Columbia was compelled to rent a theater to accommodate the "Sing," which now originates in Hollywood. J. H. H.

Veterans' Hunger Strike. Wilno, Poland, Feb. 23 (AP).—Twenty World-War invalids, unable to obtain employment, locked themselves in a private apartment today on a hunger strike until the government provides them with jobs. The hunger strikers declared the government pensions most of them receive were too small for subsistence.

ChoirGirl Flees Scene of Jilted Suitor's Suicide

'Other Dates' Cause Death After Abduction and Wild Auto Ride.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Emmett, Idaho, Feb. 25.—A pretty choir girl, seized by a jealous suitor at the door of her church, told tearfully today of a wild night ride and hours of terror on a country lane, climaxed when her suitor shot himself because she jilted him.

While the girl, Gynell Soom, 20, kept in seclusion, Sheriff Boise Riggs said he was convinced the death of 22-year-old Kenneth Crowther was suicide.

"I thought I had him quieted," the brown-eyed Latter Day Saints Church worker sobbed to Sheriff Riggs. "Then I heard the shot."

Inside his closed small coupe, a bullet from a single-shot .22-caliber rifle in his temple, Crowther's body was found on a side road 20 miles south of this valley town of 2,000.

Miss Soom, eldest of a family of five, was to have been maid of honor at the church's annual "Gold and Green Ball." She was at the church arranging for the affair last night.

Driving up for four hours, Miss Soom, who, friends disclosed, had asked him to return her high school ring. She had been "having other dates."

"Outside," said Clarence Skinner, an acquaintance, "the boy grabbed her and put her in the car."

"Just as they started off, the girl's father, Robert Soom, a laborer, ran up. He grabbed a fender and tried to stop them. He was thrown off when the car swung around a corner. He wasn't hurt. Crowther had been at the house, a back and a half from the church, inquiring for the girl. The father ran over there, frightened at Crowther's demeanor."

Miss Soom's startled companions shed by helplessly.

"He drove several miles south of Emmett," Miss Soom told the sheriff at dawn, shortly after the finding of Crowther's body. "We drove up a side road for four hours. I tried to persuade him to take me home. He said he would kill either me or himself if I didn't go back to him. Then he kept saying for me to get out and leave him."

She struggled from the car and fled. Before she had stumbled more than a few hundred yards through snowdrifts and ruts she heard a shot.

"At a nearby construction camp," Sheriff Riggs related, "she hammered on doors until the occupants were awakened. After telephoning town, a party went to the car. They found the boy about 3 o'clock."

Meantime, frantically searching throughout the night were the sheriff, the girl's father and brother in one car and in another Cornelius Fowler, 22.

"Miss Soom and Fowler had been having a few dates," said Skinner. "But they never went any further between Fowler and Crowther, so far as anybody seems to know."

Fiddler's Blonde Faces Charge Of Bigamy After Suit Fails

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 25.—The arrest of Peggy Garcia, blonde hal-check girl whose $500,000 breach of promise suit against David Rubinfeld, radio violin maestro, was withdrawn yesterday, was ordered by Assistant District Attorney Harold W. Hastings today.

With her was ordered arrested Michael La Rocca, a granite salesman, whom she married in 1934.

The charge, Hastings said, was bigamy.

Hastings ordered the arrest after a woman identifying herself as Mrs. Kathleen La Rocca appeared at the office of the district attorney and produced a marriage license indicating she had married La Rocca in 1934.

Papa May Take Peggy Home.

New York, Feb. 25 (AP).—Peggy Garcia's hill-billy papa, worn out by a tour of night clubs, allowed today he might take her back to Virginia, but the little blonde who lost a $500,000 heart-balm suit against Fiddler Dave Rubinfeld said she is going to stay here and have a career. (This was before her arrest was ordered on a charge of bigamy—Editor's note.)

Her career got off to a sad start today for when she opened her luggage she found that somebody had cut her gowns, tailored suits, lingerie and stockings into ribbons and rags.

"Five hundred bucks gone," she wailed, and then said she suspected that her husband had done it for spite. Her husband is Michael La Rocca.

"I should have brought my shotgun," said Miss Garcia's father, Cornelius Harvey.

When Miss Garcia calmed down she drew her hostess gown around her, curled up on a divan and offered advice to the lovelorn.

"It doesn't pay to be a butterfly," she said dreamily. "Girls should stay away from Broadway and celebrities."

Two Sentenced To Three Years In Vote Frauds

5 Others Also Get Prison and Jail Terms at Kansas City.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, Feb. 25.—Judge Merrill E. Otis meted out prison and jail sentences today to seven men convicted of vote theft conspiracy in the Government's punitive drive on election irregularities here last November.

"They who would prevent citizens from casting the ballots of freemen," said Judge Otis, "are as much the enemies of America as its foes in war."

Frank H. Adams, Republican precinct judge, and John A. Luteran, Democratic precinct captain, received three-year sentences in Leavenworth Penitentiary, the heaviest penalties.

John H. Drummond, Democratic captain, and Edson M. Walker, Democratic judge, were sentenced to two years at Leavenworth. Walker was convicted yesterday of attempting to suborn perjury in the case.

But a party went to the car. They found the boy about 3 o'clock.

Meantime, frantically searching throughout the night were the sheriff, the girl's father and brother in one car and in another Cornelius Fowler, 22.

"Miss Soom and Fowler had been having a few dates," said Skinner. "But they never went any further between Fowler and Crowther, so far as anybody seems to know."

Leo B. Roach, a city patrolman assigned to election guard duty last November, was sentenced to six months in jail.

A year of probation was granted four women defendants who pleaded no defense and testified for the Government. They are Mrs. Tessie Mears and Mrs. Callie Clark, Democrats; Mrs. Chloe O. Albright and Miss Pearl Sperry, Republicans.

Of the 75 election workers indicted in the last month, more than 60 are awaiting trial. The grand jury, now in recess, will resume investigations March 1.

Adm. Allen Ordered To Duty in Washington

Rear Admiral W. H. Allen, now on duty as commander of the Yangtze patrol, has been ordered to duty with the Bureau of Naval Operations at the Navy Department here, according to Asiatic dispatch orders issued yesterday.

It will be his second tour of duty in Washington, as he previously was attached to the Bureau of Naval Operations.

Appointed a cadet midshipman from South Carolina in 1897, Admiral Allen has served on the U. S. S. Arizona, Virginia and Yorktown, and has commanded the U. S. S. Sirois, Albatross and Denver. He was appointed a captain in 1924 and a rear admiral three years ago. Previous to his present assignment he was commandant of the Sixteenth Naval District at Cavite, P. I.

Finding of Gun Snarls Writer's Death Inquiry

Weapon, With 2 Shots Fired, Found in Drawer at Scenarist's Home.

By the Associated Press.

Palm Springs, Calif., Feb. 25.—Police puzzled tonight over the killing of Humphrey Pearson, 43-year-old writer of such screen-hit scenarios as "Ruggles of Red Gap," found shot dead in bed in his desert cottage.

Deputy Sheriff Westley Walrath said his preliminary investigation made him believe Pearson committed suicide, although a revolver from which two bullets had been fired was found in a drawer in an adjacent room.

Mrs. Pearson, found hysterical beside her husband's body, was under guard in a hospital at Riverside. Sheriff Carl Rayburn said he would not question her until she had regained poise.

Paraffin tests were made on the hands of both the dead man and Mrs. Pearson. Rayburn explained powder marks remain on the hands of a person firing a revolver and usually are disclosed by paraffin.

"The revolver, a .38-caliber from which two bullets had been fired, was found in a drawer in another room," Walrath said. "But that is not conclusive evidence that Pearson did not kill himself."

Officers said the Pearsons' colored butler, who said he summoned a physician at Mrs. Pearson's request, could give no other information.

Pearson's body was taken to nearby Banning, where an inquest will be held, probably Saturday.

Pearson, who came to Hollywood seven years ago, wrote adaptations and screen plays. Because of ill health, he had lived in Palm Springs during the winter for several years. In Hollywood, he and Mrs. Pearson were known as an affectionate couple.

Pearson is credited with writing the scenarios of "Ruggles of Red Gap," "What Price Hollywood," "Red Salute," "The Great Flirtation," "Elmer and Elsie."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Who Sulked Under Boy Friend's Teasing Until She Provoked His Anger Asks How to Make Up.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have had a very foolish quarrel with a boy I had been out with several times. He was teasing me while we were visiting a friend's home, before a group of persons I had just met, about something I had previously done and I took it to heart. A very silly thing to do, but I did it. I was cool to him the remainder of the evening. He tried to explain to me but I would not listen. His patience was tiring when I offered my apology and he refused to accept it. Since then he has even refused to speak to me.

I like this young man very much and would like to regain his friendship, if possible. I feel it is my fault that such a trivial thing should have come between us. Do you have any suggestions for persuading him to forgive and forget, and restoring the interest in me he showed at first? Your advice will be much appreciated. Sincerely,

DEAR IRISH: I dare say the young man would have found it easy enough to understand and forgive your transient resentment of his teasing had you not retaliated by deliberately snubbing and humiliating him before a company of friends who must have seen his apologetic overtures, rejected them and again. I imagine he gave up in anger finally because he decided you were a complete wet blanket and spoilt sport. And when he came to that conclusion his interest in you probably died an instantaneous death.

You probably will need to go the whole way in eating humble pie if friendship is to be restored. You might write him a letter, telling him you are ashamed of the childish way you acted; sorry that you can say for having hurt his feelings so unnecessarily and deeply distressed over the subsequent loss of his good will and friendship. Tell him you have learned a painful lesson concerning the folly of making a mountain out of a molehill. Ask him to give a very penitent girl a chance to redeem herself in the eyes of a man whose friendship she values very much. Tell him you know he is very kind, too generous, too understanding to turn a deaf ear to this appeal. If he can be made to feel that he is doing a really magnanimous thing in letting bygones be bygones, he will probably relent. M. H.

Two Girls' Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My case is very trying and has been worrying me for a long time. You see, it's this way. I am going with one fellow but I can accept him only as a pal, for I am really in love with another man, but neither knows this. I don't want to hurt the man I am going with, but how can I tell the other man that he is the one I love? And how can I tell the one I'm going with now about my love for another? Please advise me. ROSE W.

DEAR ROSE W.: If the man you are going with, whom you can "accept" only as a pal, repeatedly declares his love for you and asks you to marry him, you might tell him quite simply and directly that you cannot respond to his suit for the reason that you are in love with someone else; but don't name that "some one else," unless he asks "what's his name?" "Is it so-and-so?" In that case, I suppose it would be only fair to specify. However, if he is merely attentive without revealing any intention, there is no reason on earth why you should admit you are in love with another man. Do so would be taking too much for granted.

Since you don't mention "going out" with "the other man," I take it he isn't greatly concerned about you and pays you little, if any, attention. Therefore, I see no justification for confronting him with a declaration of love, and that conceives of any circumstance or situation in which such an admission could gracefully be made. The only thing to do is to keep your secret to yourself, unless you wish to depict yourself as something of a fool. M. H.

Should She Tell Love?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Would it be proper for my girl chum and myself to entertain two boy friends of ours at our parents' home for Sunday dinner? I have had two dates with the boy I am thinking of inviting, and my girl friend has been out twice with the boy she is interested in. I have asked mother about it and she says it does not sound quite right to her, as these boys do not go with us regularly. I have not had a date for quite a while and mother thinks it would appear that I was pursuing him. But we are two girls anxiously awaiting your advice and opinion in the matter. Please answer as soon as possible. TWO GIRLS.

DEAR GIRLS: It's just possible that the boys might surmise that you and your girl chum are pursuing

Crocheting With String Makes Cost Lower for Lace Spreads

Pattern 5775.

PUT YOURSELF in the "luxury class" by crocheting a lace spread for your "best" bed, or a handsome cloth for your dinner table. You can realize both at pin-money cost, if you crochet them of string. With crochet hook in hand, you'll soon discover how quickly each of the 10-inch "companion" squares may be learned, how easily "repeats" are made, then whipped together for many a useable article. And if you favor one of the designs, use just that and repeat it. In pattern 5775 you will find instructions and charts for making the squares shown; an illustration of them and of the stitches used, material required.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 238 West Fourteenth street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

Lissom Figures and Varied Tones in Make-Up Necessary to Set Off New Spring Ensembles

Beautician Says Posture and Complexion Main Aids to Chic.

By Ethel Ehlen.

ARE YOU a woman with jitters, a away back, or of the debilitated slouch variety? If you fall into any of these classifications, you have ungainly posture and cannot wear successfully the new spring clothes, according to Elizabeth Arden, beautician, who maintains that beauty is not only that of face and form, but of grace and charm, which are synonymous with personality. "Before you can either attain a graceful carriage or flawless complexion to complement chic grooming," she explained in a recent New York interview, "you have to streamline your figure to harmonize with the latest dictates of fashion."

What is this new figure? Authorities of both Paris and New York decree a definite nip in the waist with just a suggestion of a hip-line. None of the bumps formerly known as hips are permitted. The diaphragm must be as flat as nature will permit and the bust uplifted, round and firm. In other words, the figure must be sculptured to harmonize with the current vogue for sculpturing trends in the coiffure and to offset ideally the new form-fitting costumes, ubiquitous in the spring style scene.

Complexions Match Costumes. "How about color?" Miss Arden was asked. "Do you believe that any woman can wear any color?" Her answer was a very definite "Yes! No matter how daring and dramatic a woman may consider this venture into color," Miss Arden commented, "she can wear any color triumphantly by harmonizing her make-up to the chosen hue or tint."

To prove this statement, mannequins attired in a number of the new spring tones, with complexions attuned to the costume colors, were paraded about Miss Arden's salon. The trick about the idea seemed to be, "if your face doesn't match your costume, change your complexion to harmonize with your ensemble."

Since black is the leading color for both spring and summer, according to previews in the markets and predictions of famous designers, and since it is invariably touched off with a bit of white for spring, make-up for this color combination is vastly important, according to Miss Arden. For both day-time and evening, the sparkle and radiance of the English complexion—mateness, with no trace of the artifice which has gone into the making of it—is the best complement for either all-black or black and white. She said this is accomplished, she explained, by mixing foundation lotions and cream, and using two shades of powder. A lighter shade over a darker one, plus rouge and lipstick, which repeat the natural blood tones.

For Difficult Colors. Chartreuse, classed as one of the most difficult of all tones to wear, can be made flattering to any woman, Miss Arden maintained, by using a rachel foundation cream or lotion with Chinese amber powder topped by a lighter colored powder and finished with two tones of nauturium rouge and lipstick.

Custom Decrees Formal Thanks By House Guest

Hostess Expresses Chagrin at Lack of Courteous Farewells.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE QUESTION of "thank you" notes and of acknowledgments of invitations are very important not only to those who are entertained but to those who do the entertaining. Many Washington hostesses express their chagrin at the lack of appreciation shown by guests who have enjoyed their hospitality and never write a single line of thanks when they return home.

Hostess Writes.

One hostess has written as follows on this subject: Dear Miss Wallace: My son and daughter frequently bring guests to our house to remain for any time from a week-end to two or three weeks. We encourage them to do so of course. I am rather chagrined however at the lack of manners of the youth of today. These young people arrive at our house in the most casual way making themselves entirely at home and except for a pleasant farewell and a "thanks for a good time" or "I'll be seeing you sometime again," they express no thanks at all. I have instructed my son and daughter always to be very formal when they are visitors at a home, no matter how friendly may be their relations with the young people of the house. I have always told them to make their farewells most courteously and to express appreciation for the privilege of having been a guest in that home. Of course I expect them to write "thank you" letters promptly. But so many of the young people who come to our house to visit never do this. M. L. P.

Formal Thanks Necessary.

A hostess who has made a guest as comfortable and happy as she can naturally expects a "thank you" letter. This should be especially forthcoming from younger people. A light and casual thanks when saying farewell is not sufficient.

Another Problem.

Another Washington woman has a problem in the failure of invited guests to answer invitations promptly. This is unpardonable and never is a practice of any one who has any idea of the rules of good form. Invitations should be acknowledged with acceptance or regrets within three days of the time they are received.

This woman writes: I had planned a dinner of 16 to celebrate my husband's birthday. Four persons did not respond to the invitation at all, while six of them waited until within five days of the date to answer. I sent out the invitations two weeks in advance. When I did not get answers to the invitations I sent telegrams in order that I could know whether or not to invite four other guests. I had to keep the number of my guests to 16 as that is the limit of my dinner service. One of the women who did not answer the invitation became very indignant and telephoned me that she had intended to come to my dinner but since I found it necessary to alter the menu she would not come and her husband would not come either. Is it good form to send telegrams under the circumstances? Do you think was remiss or the woman who did not answer my invitation?

Very Rude of Woman.

You were not remiss. It was rude of the woman not to answer the invitation and very rude of her to refuse your invitation in such a manner. If she did not follow up her refusal over the telephone with a written note of regret she was even more guilty of rudeness. Custom has made it proper to check up on those who have not answered a dinner invitation by telegram. It is also proper to telephone or to write a brief note.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

About Eyes.

The following questions are those which the nurse or social worker is supposed to be able to answer about the eyes:

1. What can a nurse do to prevent birth infections of the eyes? She must help in educating each expectant mother to insist on the use of a prophylactic in the eyes of her baby at the time of birth, in order to guard against all infections. One per cent silver nitrate is the prophylactic usually used.

Meaning of Test.

2. What is meant by testing of visual acuity? The testing of visual acuity is a means of determining acuteness of central vision in each eye. It is the most common method of detecting deviations from normal. By using this test it is possible to find many persons of all age groups who are in need of examination by an oculist. There are many eye conditions which do not affect central vision. The nurse can observe evidences suggesting visual difficulty, such as abnormal posture of head or body during the test, frowning, an obvious effort to see the chart during the test, the eyes filling with tears.

3. When should the first test of visual acuity be given to children? A vision test should be part of the health examination of every preschool child. Charts for performing this test can be obtained from the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, 50 West Fifth Street, New York, N. Y.

4. What are the most common eye difficulties found in children? (a) Errors of refraction of various degrees and seriousness. (b) Failure of the two eyes to work together, arising from a variety of causes and generally referred to as strabismus or squint. (c) Congenital and hereditary eye defects.

5-Point Difference.

5. Why do the two eyes sometimes fail to work together? (a) A difference in the state of refraction of each eye. (b) There may be imperfect vision in one eye at birth. (c) There may be a deviation from normal in the muscles which control the movements of the eye. (d) The fusion faculty may be lacking or fail to develop perfectly. (e) Eye disease or injury may be responsible for the failure of the two eyes to work together. 6. Does reading in bed harm the eyes? If the proper posture is maintained, adequate light is supplied, free from glare, and attention is given to the selection of the size of the type and the character of the paper upon which the printing is done, reading in bed is not harmful to the eyes. Reading in bed during an illness should not be encouraged, even when physical arrangements mentioned above, except with the consent of the physician. After a serious illness special attention should be directed to the protection and care of the eyes. During convalescence the delicate structures of the eyes may be damaged through misuse and overwork.

Coronation Sways Chanel Fashions

Gowns in Wide Variety of Materials Displayed.

Paris, (AP)—Fluted muslins and frilled laces, flower wreathed organdies and spangled tulle reflected coronation influences in the Chanel collection of spring fashions here this week.

Garden party frocks appeared in white organdies, tulle sashed with moire ribbon of pink or blue. Chiffon dresses were in coronation red or blue. Evening dresses were shown in frilled white or navy laces, fluted pink organdie. Pink roses wreathed green organdie, and thick garlands of flowers outlined decollete edges of printed evening dresses. Afternoon frocks featured short sleeves, slightly low necks, shirred front and full skirt.

Lenten Week Livened By Luncheons, Dinners

The Roosevelts Hosts Tonight in Honor of Mrs. Morgenthau; Dominican Envoy, Wife Will Entertain at Reception for 1,000.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Luncheons and dinner parties in the official and diplomatic set are livening an otherwise quiet Lenten week—quiet, that is, until tomorrow night, when the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Mme. Pastoriza entertain at one of the largest functions of the season—a reception at the Pan-American Union for more than a thousand guests.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt will be hosts tonight at a dinner at the Executive Mansion in honor of Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, followed by a musicale to which additional guests have been invited.

Last night several dinners were given by members of the diplomatic corps. The Ambassador of Japan and Mme. Saito entertained in honor of the retiring Ambassador of China and Mme. Sze; the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Ertegun were honored at a dinner at which the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri entertained, and the Ambassador of Argentina and Mme. Espil were the honor guests at the dinner for a company of 24 given by the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik.

The guests of the Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Saito, in addition to the Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Sze, were the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau, the Secretary of War, Mr. Harry H. Woodring; Senator and Mrs. Key Pittman, Senator and Mrs. Gerald P. Nye, Senator and Mrs. J. Hamilton Lewis, the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Peter, Representative Samuel Dickstein, Representative Caroline O'Day, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and Mrs. Mariner S. Eccles, the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Francis B. Sayre, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Thomas G. Ashburn. Also Rear Admiral David F. Sellers, of the U. S. Naval Academy and Mrs. Sellers; Dr. Harry A. Garfield, president emeritus of Williams College, and Mrs. Garfield; the Counselor of the Netherlands Legation, Baron van Breugel Douglas, Mr. Herbert C. Hengstler, Capt. William D. Puleston, U. S. N., and Mrs. Puleston; the Naval Attache of the Japanese Embassy and Mme. Kobayashi, and the Second Secretary of the Japanese Embassy and Mme. K. Okazaki.

At the dinner given by the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri, others in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Dooman, Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim, Mr. George Bonnesco, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Reilly and the Third Secretary of the Siam Legation, Mr. Luang Dithakar Bhakdi.

There was also a luncheon given for Mme. Sze yesterday by Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman and another function is being given tonight for the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Ertegun, a dinner for which the Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close have issued invitations.

Another luncheon for a member of the diplomatic group yesterday was that given by the Director of the Pan-American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe, honoring the Minister of Costa Rica, Senor don Ricardo Castro Beeche.

Other guests were the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel C. Roper; the Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Roswell Magill; the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles; the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Oscar L. Chapman; the Consul General of Costa Rica in New York, Senor Dr. Arturo Fernandez.

Also the Chairman of the U. S. Tariff Commission, Mr. Robert L. O'Brien; the Surgeon General of the U. S. Public Health Service, Dr. Thomas Parren, Jr.; the Chief of the Latin-American Division of the Department of State, Mr. Laurence Duggan; the Assistant Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Dr. Alexander Wetmore; the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Mr. Alexander V. Dye; the Director of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, Dr. Hugh S. Cumming; the Secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Dr. James Brown Scott, and the Assistant Director of the Pan-American Union, Senor Dr. Pedro de Alba.

Mrs. Roosevelt returned to Washington yesterday from New York and in the afternoon received the retiring Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson, and his daughter, Senorita Olga Patterson.

Mrs. Roosevelt will entertain at a tea this afternoon for persons who have left cards at the White House.

Lady Lindsay, wife of the British Ambassador, is absent from Washington because of illness and will spend a month in a New York hospital. She will not return to Washington until early in April.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull have as their guest in their apartment at the Carlton Hotel, Mrs. J. L. Witz, of Staunton, Va.

Miss Worthington to Visit Florida Following Completion of Course.

Miss Ethel Worthington, debutante daughter of Mrs. Ralph Worthington, is one of the girls finishing her Junior League provisional course today and, with that completed, she and her mother are preparing to leave Monday for a two-week visit in Miami and Georgia.

They will then return home to prepare to sail April 28 for England aboard the Europa. They will spend three months abroad accompanied by Mrs. Edward Gibson, of Baltimore, and her daughter, Miss Cecil Gibson, who made her debut there a year ago. Mr. Ralph Worthington, who is at Chapel Hill, N. C., will join them in June and motor with them through Scotland and on the continent. Mrs. Worthington is taking her car abroad with her.

Miss Worthington has had as her guest for the last days, Miss Carlisle Porter, whose parents, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. David D. Porter, left last week for Philadelphia, where the family will live. Miss Porter is now the guest of Miss Ann Child, daughter of Mrs. E. W. Pavenstedt.

Mrs. Frederick A. Keep, sister of Miss Mabel Boardman, is arriving in Washington Monday, March 8, from California, where she has been for several weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Casanova G. Lee, Jr., who are in Sarasota, Fla., will come to Washington, March 10 for the rest of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stimson left yesterday for a visit in South Carolina. They will return to Washington next month.

Bryn Mawr Alumnae Council Given Buffet Luncheon by Baroness Korff.

Baroness Serge Korff was hostess to members of the Bryn Mawr Alumnae Council yesterday afternoon at a buffet luncheon preceding the opening business meeting of the council's three-day session in Washington. Later in the afternoon, the members were received at tea by Mrs. Roosevelt.

Assisting Baroness Korff at the luncheon were Mrs. Learned Hand, of New York, who was a gown of duobonnet crepe with a velvet turban to match; Mrs. F. Louis Slade, of New York; Miss Hilda Smith, of Washington, a former member of the Bryn Mawr faculty, and Mrs. Alger Hiss, president of the Washington Bryn Mawr Alumnae Club. Baroness Korff wore a brown crepe dress trimmed in gold and a brown felt hat.

Dean Helen Taft Manning, who is a guest at the home of her mother, Mrs. William Howard Taft, arrived at the luncheon directly from the train which had been delayed an hour. She wore a black dress with small bands of Chinese embroidery at the neck and cuffs, and a black felt hat with a rhinestone ornament. Although her mother is on a Mediterranean cruise, she and Miss Mary Gardner, of Bryn Mawr, are guests at her home.

Miss Olivia Stokes, in a plum-colored tweed coat and a little plum-colored hat trimmed in fur, stopped by for a few minutes to greet friends, but did not remain for the luncheon. Mrs. G. Potter Darrow, president of the Alumnae Association, here from Chestnut Hill, Pa., was wearing a black crepe dress trimmed in a scarf of powder blue which formed the front of the blouse. Mrs. Talbot Aldrich, of Boston, wore a gown of red with gold lame blouse and Miss Lucy Kimberley, president of the senior class of Bryn Mawr, and the only undergraduate in the council, wore a powder blue frock and a black velvet beret.

One of the most distinctive costumes was that of Dr. Mary Morgan Lee, of Chicago. Her suit and hat were of a soft olive green and she wore a satin blouse of antique gold.

The table at which the buffet luncheon was served, had a center bouquet of spring flowers in which shades of pink and yellow predominated and was lighted by tall pink candles in silver candlesticks.

The sessions of the council continue today and tomorrow with Mrs. Norman Murray Smith's luncheon, and the tea at which Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes and her daughter, Miss Olivia Stokes are entertaining this afternoon; the dinner for President Marion Edwards Park, of Bryn Mawr, this evening at the Sulgrave Club, and the closing session at the home of Mrs. Howell Moorhead tomorrow. President Park is not arriving until today.

Baroness Korff Hostess to Bryn Mawr Alumnae Council

Mrs. Cumming Given Luncheon

Wife of Former Surgeon General Honored by Mrs. Parran.

Mrs. Hugh S. Cumming, wife of the former Surgeon General of the United States Army, was guest of honor for whom Mrs. Thomas Parran, wife of the Surgeon General, United States Public Health Service, entertained at a luncheon at the Shoreham yesterday. Dr. and Mrs. Cumming are leaving March 2 to spend a month in Italy and later Dr. Cumming will represent the Surgeon General at the League of Nations in Geneva.

Wife of Canadian Minister to Be Honored Today.

Lady Marler, wife of the Canadian Minister, will be the guest of honor at the luncheon to be given today by the English Speaking Union at the Willard Hotel.

Among those who have taken tables are the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close, Gen. and Mrs. George Striven, Mr. Edward B. Meigs, Mr. and Mrs. Royal B. McKenna, who will have as their guests the First Secretary of the Canadian Legation, and Mrs. Mercant Mahoney and the latter's father, Dr. Paul Mahoney, of Ottawa; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace McClure, Mrs. Horace Shores, Miss Anne McGowan and Mrs. Harrel Mullikin.

Church Carnival's Patronesses Listed

Affair to Be Presented on Thursday Evening.

Patronesses have been announced for the Carnival of Nations to be presented by the Business and Professional Women's Club of All Souls' Church on Thursday evening, March 11. The carnival is under the direction of Miss Kathryn Dunkhorst.

Among the patrons are Dr. and Mrs. U. G. B. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence C. Staples, Mr. and Mrs. Karl S. Hoffman, Dr. Julia M. Green, Dr. and Mrs. Lee C. Smiths Have Guests. Rear Admiral and Mrs. Norman Murray Smith will have as their guests over the week-end Col. and Mrs. Robert Sears, of Boston, and will entertain eight guests at dinner in their honor at the Chevy Chase Club. Last week-end they had as their guests Mrs. Smith's niece, Mrs. Thomas Durrell, and Mr. Durrell, of New York, who have many friends in the Capital.

THE MERRY WHIRL

The Dominican Minister and Mme. Pastoriza are practically getting ready to move out of their legation. Not because they have been house-hunting or anything of that sort, but to make place for all their guests. They are in the midst of a house party of people arriving for the reception they are giving tomorrow night.

The first to come was Lolita Battle, vivacious niece who flits between here and New York, but never stays here quite long enough. Then came Maria Sofia Valverde, pretty sister of young Sebastian Valverde, who is to remain here for several weeks. Andres, Jr., is shutting up his books at Brown University, and with his boon companions, Alfred Bloomingdale and David Condon, Jr., of New York, will arrive today. They have declared a special holiday from studies so as to be here for the celebrating tomorrow evening. Tomas, the young boy, who is a cadet at the Peckskill Military Academy, will be here, too. When it came time for the word to be said concerning his "leave" the commandant of the school could do nothing but permit him the several days' absence, because he stands at the top of his class. So, in his handsome blue uniform, he will mingle with the guests at his parents' party as will little Matilda, whose very first party it will be. This is by no means a new thing, for she has won't be for several years—but she is being allowed not only to stay up longer than usual, but she will be permitted to wear a long frock.

The Smith brothers, Doug, Walter and Billy, whose family is famous for its entertaining—their summer home, Coon Manor, being the scene of many a gay gathering during the warmer months—will be hosts at a breakfast Sunday in their Alexandria home—honoring their cousin, Helen Beatty.

Little Barbara Caldwell, precocious daughter of the L. L. Caldwells, is starting in young to fascinate her little friends. Small, very dainty with long golden curls and wide blue eyes she is a natural. Now, when he gets home from school the telephone rings and keeps on so doing until her list of admirers have all had their say. It is quite an inspiration, for already one young lad has given promise of bursting forth into the literary world, having written a 16 verse poem dedicated to Barbara.

When little Miss Caldwell starts Mrs. Nash Returns Here After N. Y. Marriage

Mrs. Robert Nash, the former Miss Eleanor Bramon, whose marriage took place Tuesday morning in the Little Church Around the Corner, in New York, has returned to Washington, while her husband is on the high seas, on his way to Honolulu. Mr. Nash, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Nash, of this city, who is with the Ishman Line, was obliged to make a trip to the Hawaiian Islands, leaving the day of his marriage.

His mother, who went to New York to be present at the wedding, accompanied his bride back to Washington. The younger Mrs. Nash is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Bramon, of St. Louis, but has been here for some time, employed in the Bureau of Soil Conservation.

President of Philippines Will Arrive Here Today

Manuel Quezon and Party, Including His Two Daughters, Will Be Feted During Their Six-Week Stay.

President Manuel Quezon, of the Philippine Commonwealth, will arrive in the Capital this afternoon from New York, accompanied by his two daughters, the Misses Aurora and Zaneida Quezon; Mr. Jose Yulo, Secretary of Justice of the Commonwealth, and Mr. Carlos P. Remulo, distinguished Philippine journalist.

The arrival of President Quezon and his party, who spent several days in New York before coming to Washington, will be the occasion for much official entertaining. They will be met at the station by Brig. Gen. Creed F. Cox and Col. Donald MacDonald, representing the Secretary of War, Mr. Harry H. Woodring.

Tomorrow night President Quezon will attend the dinner given at the Willard by the Carabao Society, composed of Army and Navy officers. He will be accompanied by the Commissioner of the Philippines, Mr. Quintin Paredes, and Gen. Douglas MacArthur, former Chief of Staff, U. S. A., who has just returned to Washington from the Philippines.

President Roosevelt will entertain

President Quezon at luncheon either Monday or Tuesday of next week, and Monday evening the Secretary of War will entertain in his honor.

March 5 the Commissioner of the Philippines will give a reception for the visiting President and other parties also are being planned for him. He will remain here six weeks and will be joined March 20 by Mrs. Quezon. It is their first visit to Washington.

They have friends in the Capital, including the Vice President and Mrs. Garner, Senator and Mrs. William King, former Senator and Mrs. Harry Hawes and others who went from here as representatives of this Government at President Quezon's inauguration.

Ambassador Takes Box.

The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Trovanovsky will occupy a box at the costume ball of the gay nineties to be given by the President's Cup Regatta Association on Friday evening, March 12, at 10 o'clock, at the Willard Hotel.

Mrs. Dougherty Hostess To Boys' Club Auxiliary

Mrs. Roosevelt, Honorary Chairman of Newly-Appointed Group, to Be Guest at Party; Mrs. Doherty Also to Attend.

Mrs. John Allan Dougherty will be hostess at a luncheon at the Raleigh Hotel today at 1 o'clock at which she will entertain a group she has chosen to assist her in launching a woman's auxiliary to the Police Boys Club. Mrs. Roosevelt has accepted the honorary chairmanship of the auxiliary and will be one of the guests at the luncheon.

Mrs. Dougherty returned yesterday afternoon from Florida, where she has been since January. Mrs. Henry L. Doherty, who also has been there, is arriving in the Capital this morning and will attend the luncheon, having accepted the honorary vice chairmanship of the auxiliary.

Mrs. Dougherty has been interested in the boys' club project since it was started and has recently given much time to the study of what is being done in other cities and means by which civic minded persons of the community can assist. She has worked out a program for the auxiliary she is organizing.

Heading various committees will be Mrs. Hugh Matthews, the Misses Elizabeth and Mary Howry, Mrs. Lloyd Biddle, Miss Mae Helm, Miss Janet Richards, Mrs. Frances Troy

Northerness and Mrs. Falk Harner. There will be committees on social service, education, books, games, music, dancing, camp care, publicity and a house chairman.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

Social as well as artistic circles of the Capital welcome the arrival here for the spring season of Mr. and Mrs. John Russell Pope, architect of the new Mellon Art Gallery, is working on his plans for the building and, with Mrs. Pope, has taken a house here. With them is their daughter, Miss Jane Pope.

Washington already possesses several notable examples of Mr. Pope's architectural skill in the Scottish Rite Temple and Constitution Memorial Hall, national headquarters of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Another distinguished artist is here for the opening of her special exhibition of portrait drawings in pastel, Miss Elizabeth Telling, of Chicago. The exhibition opened at the Corcoran Gallery of Art last Saturday and will continue until March 14. Miss Telling is a lecturer and ethnographer and is represented in many public and private collections, including the Art Institute of Chicago, the Bishop Art Gallery of Honolulu, the Los Angeles Museum and Tulane University, New Orleans.

Many of her portraits deal with subjects painted at first hand in Guatemala, Siam, Bali, Java and the Yucatan. An interesting story is told of one of her portraits, that of a Balinese girl. When Miss Telling started to paint her in Bali several years ago, the girl jumped up and said, "I must have a flower in my hair." She came back wearing a red flower. Miss Telling reminded her that this red blossom was traditionally worn only by the men of the island. The native girl responded "Americans don't know the difference," and in Miss Telling's portrait the girl appears with the red flower in her hair.

Mrs. Amory Perkins, of Middleburg, is to have a guest soon in Miss Doreen O'Brien, of London, now visiting in Washington. Mrs. Linn, at Lake Bluff, near Chicago. Miss O'Brien and Mrs. Linn hunted together in England last year, and Mrs. Perkins was in Ireland when she joined Miss O'Brien on her hunt.

Miss Zolnay Luncheon in Honor of Mrs. Roosevelt Is Married In New York

Bride's Niece Serves as Flower Girl for Marriage.

Of interest to Washington was the wedding yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in New York of Miss Margaret Zolnay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Julian Zolnay, of that city, to Mr. John Churchill Newcomb, also of New York, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Danforth Newcomb, of Waverly Wall, Greenwood, Va., and Louisville, Ky.

The ceremony was performed by Judge Overton Harris of New York, and was followed by a reception for members of the families and a few close friends. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a century-old rose point lace gown, with a matching veil over tulle, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and freesia.

The bride's sister, Mrs. George T. Summerlin, Jr., until recently of Washington, was matron of honor. She wore a gown of flowered tulle in shades of blue and carried gardenias. Miss Virginia Summerlin, the bride's niece, served as flower girl, wearing a peach net frock with a high waist and full ruffled skirt.

Mr. George L. Maxwell was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Nathaniel Choate, of Boston; Mr. Owen Wister, of Philadelphia; Mr. Stewart Bryan, of Richmond, Va.; Mr. Sherwin Badger, of Riverside, Conn.; Mr. Robert D. Hale, of New York; Mr. Robert Pike Bradford, of Boston; Mr. Winthrop Churchill, of Boston; and Mr. Richard Cowling, of Louisville, Ky.

Following a wedding trip, the couple will live in New York. The bride, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., is an active member of the Junior League.

Mr. Newcomb, who was prepared for college at Morrilton School, was graduated in 1923 from Harvard, where he was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi and Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternities, and an editor of the Lampoon.

Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, new president of the Woman's National Democratic Club, is among women who will attend the luncheon show on Monday.

Mrs. Isaac Behrend, of New York, is spending several weeks in Miami.

Mrs. Meyer Loeb and Mrs. Alvin Newman are spending the week in Nanuet, N. Y.

Italy Rejoices At Execution Of Ras Desta

Selassie's Son-in-Law Is Trapped; Aides Liquidated.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Feb. 25.—Relief and rejoicing swept Italy tonight in the aftermath of capture and execution of Ras Desta Demtu, son-in-law and "last hope" of Haile Selassie, conquered Ethiopian king of kings.

Desta, who often promised to give up, but never really submitted, was tracked down in the region west of the southern Ethiopian lakes, his last column decimated and his subordinates "liquidated." Taken with a few of his men, he was "turned immediately over to the firing squad." Viceroy Rodolfo Graziani informed Il Duce.

It was the desert fighter, Graziani, himself now recovering from bomb wounds at the hands of rebellious Addis Ababa natives, who smashed Ras Desta's defense forces, once numbering 250,000, in the southern Ethiopian conquest a year ago.

Most newspapers tonight devoted their front pages to the Desta's capture, for his stubborn activities and the attempt on Graziani's life last Friday had instigated a feeling of uncertainty as to whether Ethiopia, after all, really was "nine-tenths conquered," as officials insist.

How Il Duce, far away in Rome, really directed the doom of Ras Desta—once his emperor's special envoy to Washington—was related in the clipped phrases of Viceroy Graziani's three-page report to his chief.

It did not even mention the incident of last Friday, when Ethiopian hand grenade throwers, approaching the viceregal suite as if to receive gifts, wounded the marshal and other members of his party. Italians insist Ras Desta had nothing to do with that, although it coincided to the day with the smashing of the last of his army.

Coal Parley in N. Y. Remains in Deadlock

New York, Feb. 25 (AP).—Twenty-three men trying to draft a new working agreement for the Appalachian coal fields' 400,000 miners strode wearily from a conference room late today with nothing settled, so far as could be learned.

On every side was the same reticence that has characterized the conferees, representing the mine owners and the United Mine Workers as members of a joint committee. John L. Lewis, the union's president and head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, was in the city throughout the day but did not appear at the conference room.

Soviet Trials Just, Asserts Trotsky

Baltimore, Feb. 25 (AP).—Alexander A. Trotsky, Soviet ambassador to the United States, today described the recent trials of alleged Trotskyists in Moscow as "fair and just," adding the men would have been "convicted for the same crimes in any other country."

The ambassador addressed a Junior Chamber of Commerce meeting here.

Ready, Aim, Fire!

There is an ancient saying to this effect: When people set themselves up as targets they'll certainly be shot at. This comes to mind upon reading R. E. A. Administrator Cook's statement titled "Have You Any Complaints?" in the current issue of Rural Electrification News. "Have individuals or groups been disappointed in their dealings with R. E. A.?" inquires the administrator. "Have any of us been dilatory or impetuous?" "Have we failed to fulfill our obligations?" "Perhaps in your opinion we do not know what our job is," says the administrator, adding. . .

"I will go over each complaint and suggestion personally and all communications will be acknowledged promptly." Which brings the concluding thought that, however efficient the R. E. A. has been, Cook is going to have a lot of work answering letters now. And this for the simple reason that people who set themselves up as targets will certainly be shot at.

In best army tradition the sergeant seldom gets a hand, so the congratulations which now come the way of Sgt. Eugene Ferdinand Wemple, Company 1, 121st Engineers, District National Guard, should be reserved for the record for the sake of millions of sergeants yet unborn. Col. John W. Oehmann, of the 121st Engineers, writes the sergeant at follows:

It is with extreme pleasure that I read in the press of your heroism in pursuing and overtaking an armed bandit, who had held up and the clerks and customers in the grocery store of which you are manager. Your quick thought and positive action in cornering this bandit in the house into which he fled from a commandeered taxicab, again marks you as a member of the District of Columbia National Guard of whom we are all proud. . .

Twenty Federal officials—headed by Secretary Wallace—leave here this week-end for St. Louis to participate in the second annual North American wildlife conference, sponsored by the American Wildlife Institute. . . The Washington delegation consists of chiefs or assistants in the six major bureaus that deal with wildlife conservation. . .

Washington officials with spots on the program include: I. T. Bode, Extension Service; Ira N. Gabrielson, Biological Service; Frank Bell, Fisheries Bureau; J. C. Merriam, National Park Service; Dr. J. E. Shillinger, Biological Service; Ernest G. Holt, Game Division; Dr. H. L. Shantz, Forest Service; Frank G. Ashbrook, Fur Resources Division, and Talbot Denmed, Black Bass and Anglers' Division.

The Civil Service Assembly of the United States and Canada offers now a trim pamphlet titled, "Toward Effective Recruiting—A Method for Notifying Qualified Candidates of Scheduled Examinations." It says that there is an obvious and urgent need for a more definite and positive program through which qualified persons seeking public employment may be notified directly when examinations are announced within their specialized fields and which would assist the personnel agency in locating specialists when needed.

A hand to Joseph Bertolini, the new president of Agriculture's always booming Athletic and Recreational Association, group, about 1,400 now, that Archie Edwards was so instrumental in founding two years ago. . . Bertolini succeeds Homer Pryor in the top chair and will be assisted by William Robbins as vice president; Elsie Romero, treasurer; Mary Lou Mercer, corresponding secretary, and James Henry Lyman, recording secretary. This is the organization which is always sponsoring gay dances and which holds an annual field day tomorrow night, they are holding a dance at 12—12 in the patio of the Administration Building.

And concerning dances, Adjutant General's Office Lodge, No. 2, will hold its annual card party and dance tomorrow night in the Washington Hotel. . . Cards begin at 8:30, dancing at 10. While at the same time the Social Security Board Union employees in the Hayloft, 1236 Massachusetts avenue.

Only Seven Years. When recruits in the Army grumble, complain, about the toughness of things and life in general, the old heads reply—'for whatever comfort it may be—that's three first years. But years are the hardest. But Secretary Wallace says, in effect, to Hugh Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service, that the first seven years are the hardest. It came about in this way: Wallace, talking to Bennett, found him discouraged because farmers had not taken more interest in his work. Bennett service in more than three years has set up 540 demonstration areas, and means for stopping wind and water erosion are being demonstrated in every part of the country. But farmers living outside these areas have not used the improved methods as fast as Bennett believes they should. Said Wallace: "I told him not to become discouraged, but to remember that with any new idea it takes about seven years before the demonstrations become sufficiently talked-about so that they begin to influence the average man's actions."

Bennett is described as a soil conservation scientist and evangelist who, 10 or 15 years ago, concluded that if people did not stop mining and exploiting their soil in shortsighted and individualistic ways, a time would come when water and wind erosion would make another China of these United States.

WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1937

Loan Made For 116 Cars, Buses Here

20 Banks Join in Grant of $1,507,000 for Capital Transit.

Unusual Financing Plan Meets Approval of Utilities Body.

Twenty local and suburban banks have joined in a unique financial program to provide loans totaling $1,507,000 to the Capital Transit Co. for the purchase of 116 new street cars and buses, it was announced yesterday.

Approved by the Public Utilities Commission at the request of John H. Hanna, transit company president, the plan is in line with street railway improvements announced several months ago.

Over citizen protests and pending legal action, the company proposes to purchase 45 one-man street cars and 71 buses. The financing program was described by Hanna as the "cheapest and most available method of providing necessary funds."

Repaid in 5 Years. Nearly every principal bank in the city has agreed to provide loans. The total grant will be repaid over a five-year period and will be secured by a chattel mortgage on the new street cars and buses, it was reported.

Forty per cent of the total loan, or $603,800, will be carried by the Riggs National Bank.

Under the loan program a trust is established with the National Savings & Trust Co., as trustee. All purchase negotiations will be conducted by the trustee.

The loan will be divided into two separate grants—one-half to begin April 1 and the other half on July 1. Twenty-five per cent of each half of the loan will be repaid within five days from the date of grant, the balance to be divided in 10 equal semiannual installments during the year amortization plan. The balance will carry interest of 4 per cent.

Loan Necessary. In applying to the Public Utilities Commission for approval of the program, Hanna said:

"The need of the Capital Transit Co. for new street cars, motor coaches and other capital improvements during the coming year requires more money than the company can supply from its own resources."

When the Public Utilities Commission several months ago authorized the company to operate additional one-man street cars, city and labor groups combined in protest. An appeal from the P. U. C. order is still pending in District Court.

The Federation of Citizens Associations and Central Labor Union, instigators of the court action, contended the one-man street car program was a money-making device for employees from work and inconvenient street railway patrons.

The trust agreement between the company and the National Savings & Trust Co. will be known as the "Purchase Money Chattel Trust Agreement."

Trustee Acts for Firm. In all instances, it was pointed out, the trustee will act for the transit concern, handling the chattel mortgages as security for each individual loan.

In authorizing the financing program, P. U. C. officials said the additional equipment is "necessary for furnishing public transportation in the District."

The new street cars, designed in streamline to meet requirements of the President's conference type, represent an equal number of less desirable one-man cars in operation, transit company authorities announced.

Replacement of several antiquated buses also available for consultant physicians for the proper care of the patients in the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Glenn Dale, Md. This action was taken on the formal written request of Dr. Daniel L. Finucane, head of the sanatorium, which was sent to the association with the approval of Elwood Street, director of public welfare.

Specifically the grant is to provide for the necessary monthly or semi-monthly visits at the sanatorium of an orthopedic surgeon, a pediatrician, an ear and throat specialist and an anesthetist.

Juror Awaiting 'Heavens' Fall Causes Mistrial

A threat by a juror that he would "disagree until the heavens fell" yesterday brought about a mistrial in the case of Hudson Epps, colored boy charged with joyriding.

After the jurors had been out several hours, they sent word to Justice Peyton Gordon in District Court they were in hopeless disagreement. They were called into court, and Justice Gordon asked the foreman, Josephine Shortall, if there was any chance of the jury agreeing?

Rock Hit by Drillers Testing Site of Jefferson Memorial

Boring machine making tests for the Jefferson Memorial in the Tidal Basin.

First Test Hole at Tidal Basin Sunk 93 Feet Before Stone Is Reached; John L. Nagle Named Supervisor of Project.

Probing for bedrock on which to build the Thomas Jefferson Memorial, drillers working under an Army engineer probably reached their objective late yesterday but not until they had gone down 93 feet on the south bank of the Tidal Basin.

The Lincoln Memorial rests upon solid rock about 40 feet below the surface.

Whether rock encountered is solid and extensive enough or only a big boulder will not be known until borings have penetrated at least 10 feet farther. Workmen had gone two feet into the rock and planned to resume boring today.

Arno B. Cammerer, National Park Service director, announced that John L. Nagle, the bureau's general supervising engineer, will be overseer of the memorial project.

A resident of Washington and formerly stationed here, Nagle was assigned to St. Louis last year as the chief Government engineer on the $30,000,000 Louisiana Purchase Memorial.

Nagle filled an important role in the construction of Arlington Memorial Bridge and had charge of extensive repairs to Washington Monument a few years ago.

According to National Park Service officials, 16 or more borings will be made at the site. Given favorable weather, this will take about 32 working days.

Officials declined to predict how much greater excavation costs will be as a result of the bedrock's depth. The memorial commission was empowered to spend a limit of $3,000,000 on the project. To date no appropriation has been made. Budget Bureau is studying the commission's request for $1,500,000 to start work.

The drillers are being paid by the War Department.

Russell Pope's architectural plans for the monument will be submitted to the Fine Arts Commission on March 20.

$2,500 Granted For Tuberculosis

By unanimous vote, the board of directors of the District Tuberculosis Association yesterday made $2,500 available for consultant physicians for the proper care of the patients in the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium at Glenn Dale, Md.

This action was taken on the formal written request of Dr. Daniel L. Finucane, head of the sanatorium, which was sent to the association with the approval of Elwood Street, director of public welfare.

Specifically the grant is to provide for the necessary monthly or semi-monthly visits at the sanatorium of an orthopedic surgeon, a pediatrician, an ear and throat specialist and an anesthetist.

Juror Awaiting 'Heavens' Fall Causes Mistrial

A threat by a juror that he would "disagree until the heavens fell" yesterday brought about a mistrial in the case of Hudson Epps, colored boy charged with joyriding.

After the jurors had been out several hours, they sent word to Justice Peyton Gordon in District Court they were in hopeless disagreement. They were called into court, and Justice Gordon asked the foreman, Josephine Shortall, if there was any chance of the jury agreeing?

When she reported the juror's threat, and added she did not know when the heavens would fall, Justice Gordon said he would like to know the name of the juror, so he could order it stricken from the jury rolls forever. He congratulated the other 11 members of the jury for a "public service."

Well, I'll Tell You

We'd all be a whole lot better off if we'd just enjoy what we got and not worry about what the other fellows has. A woman can be perfectly happy because she bought a 50 cent dishpan for 38 cents until she finds out that her friend got the same pan for 37. Most of the time when you think the other fellow's getting a better deal than you are, if you just sit it down, you'd find out that there's a catch in it.

House Sets Next Monday For D. C. Bills

Norton Juvenile Court Proposal Leads List of Measures.

Majority Leader Rayburn yesterday obtained unanimous consent of the House to grant the District part day next Monday for the District day canceled last Tuesday by the death of Representative Buchanan, of Texas.

He told the House, before it adjourned until Monday, the District calendar will be taken up after the consent calendar and any motions that may be made for suspension of rules.

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, was chiefly responsible for the extra District day. Acting in the absence of Chairman Mary T. Norton, who is ill, Kennedy told House leaders that too often District legislation is lost in the rush for adjournment because District days are canceled earlier in the session.

Entitled to Time.

"I think the people of the District are certainly entitled to two days a month in the House so long as Congress is the sole legislative authority for these people," he said. The major local bill on the House calendar is the Norton proposal to revamp the juvenile court. Its effect will be to change the court from a criminal tribunal to a chancery court.

Kennedy today will confer with Senator Black, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in an effort to arrange a conference on the "red rider" repeal and modification bills for next Tuesday.

He said Representative Short (Republican), of Missouri, one of the House managers, will be back in Washington then.

Kennedy also plans to ask permission of the House to arrange a sub-committee on local fiscal matters to sit in with the former when J. L. Jacobs, director of the fiscal relations study before him.

He said this joint session will not prevent the questioning of Jacobs by his sub-committee and the Nichols sub-committee later.

The purpose of the meeting, he explained, would be to give members of his sub-committee an opportunity to get the views of the Collins group before beginning an inquiry on District taxation and other fiscal matters.

Representative Collins said Jacobs has accepted the invitation to testify and will appear next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Former Governor Named Receiver

Cary E. Hardee, former Governor of Florida and president of the Federal-American Bank, has won the appointment as new receiver for the closed Commercial National Bank, it was announced yesterday.

His appointment followed the resignation of Robert C. Baldwin. Baldwin had been receiver since 1933.

The appointment, it was said, was in line with the policy of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency to consolidate receiverships wherever possible.

Resolution Assails Close Quartering Of Sexes at Lorton

Led by Dr. James A. Nolan, director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, the corrections committee of the Washington Council of Social Agencies yesterday made an inspection tour of Lorton Reformatory and studied plans for buildings soon to be erected.

As a result, a resolution was adopted to ask the District Board of Public Welfare to reconsider plans regarding the location of the women's workhouse and one of the dormitories.

"Otherwise the women's workhouse will be much too near the men's workhouse, and the women's dormitory will be too near the road and will face a cemetery," the resolution said.

About 40 members of the corrections committee made the tour. In the absence of Ray Huff, chairman of the committee, Dr. Nolan was in charge. He was formerly secretary of the committee.

Pi Kappa Alpha Alumni Gives Banquet Tonight

Celebrating the sixty-ninth anniversary of the founding of the order, the local chapter of Pi Kappa Alpha will hold a banquet at 7:30 p. m. today at the Cosmos Club.

Elbert P. Tuttle, national president of the fraternity, will speak, and Representative John J. Sparkman, of Alabama, William M. Colmer, of Mississippi, J. Bayard Clark, of North Carolina, and A. Willis Robertson, of Virginia, all members of the fraternity, will be introduced.

Brown Charges a Policeman Practiced Law While Working

POLICEMAN WILLIAM H. McGRATH.

Four Charges Lodged Against McGrath, Former Assistant Corporation Counsel, Before Police Trial Board.

William H. McGrath, policeman and former assistant corporation counsel, will face a police trial board March 9 on four charges growing out of an alleged private law practice maintained while still a police private.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, ordered the charges served on McGrath yesterday afternoon at the Ninth Precinct Station where the policeman-lawyer has been on foot patrol duty since he was transferred from the corporation counsel's office in Police Court January 26.

The four specific charges filed against McGrath are: Accepting employment and engaging in an occupation which directly or indirectly interfered with the proper and efficient performance of his police duties; performing legal services for compensation in violation of the police regulations; conduct prejudicial to the reputation, good order and discipline of the force and wilfully making an untruthful statement before a court.

McGrath was transferred from Police Court, where he had been assigned to duty since 1926, after Mrs. Mary Catherine Richards, 2807 Fourteenth street northwest, presented to Maj. Brown an affidavit bearing out the charges.

Contrary to Rules. Maj. Brown said yesterday it is not the policy of the department to allow policemen to engage in any business from which they can obtain income while they are members of the department. McGrath, Brown said, maintained a private law office at Sixth and D streets northwest even while he was detailed to the Police Court office.

Possibility that a perjury charge might be lodged against McGrath after he was removed from the force, although Maj. Brown said no such charge would be placed until after the trial board acted on the charges already lodged.

McGrath is accused of having made untruthful statements during an equity suit between George G. Richards and his father, George P. Richards. The suit was brought when the younger Richards refused to convey property which had been given him by his father.

According to the charges, McGrath represented the elder Richards on several occasions previous to the equity case. McGrath at this time was practicing law in the office of William P. Wendell, the charges accuse.

Conversation Denied. When the elder Richards wished to reclaim his property, he procured the services of Wendell, according to Maj. Brown, and summoned McGrath as the principal witness.

At the trial, McGrath is alleged to have testified he had a telephonic conversation with the younger Richards' wife, Mrs. Mary Catherine Richards. This, the charges state, is untrue. They allege that McGrath never had conversation with Mrs. Richards over the telephone and that she appeared in McGrath's office at his request.

McGrath, who was assigned to the corporation counsel's office as a clerk in 1926, was elevated to the rank of assistant prosecutor in 1935 after he became a member of the District bar. He successfully tried several major cases in the lower court and received many commendations for his work.

Police officials said yesterday the charges placed against him probably will result in his dismissal from the force.

Board Asks WPA Jobs

Moved to action by the refusal of the Budget Bureau to approve a supplementary appropriation of $800,000 designed to take care of several hundred "employables," who are denied relief, the Social Security Board Union last night unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the District Commissioners to have these individuals placed on local WPA projects.

After discussion, it was decided to urge the Commissioners to try to place these cases on local work projects. This would require approval of an allotment by WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins.

In event that this is not possible the union recommended that the Commissioners approve a supplementary appropriation.

Churches Find Care of 3,000 Is 'Impossible'

A cool and critical attitude was displayed yesterday by officers of the Federation of Churches toward the opinion attributed to John L. Keddy, assistant Budget Bureau director, that the immediate care of 3,000 destitute and employable relief cases in the District was a responsibility of the churches.

Such a policy is "impractical" and "impossible of accomplishment," according to Dr. C. E. Hawthorne, president of the federation, and Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary, both of whom came quickly to the aid of the churches.

The reported statement of the budget office was given as his reason for turning down the recent request of the Commissioners for an $800,000 supplemental appropriation to meet the rising costs of relief dependency until June 30, and the fiscal year.

Without this sum, or even a smaller amount, relief workers are unable to cope with the situation which they say has been allowed to develop too long for the good of the community.

Officials of the organization added, however, that the churches of Washington are not unmindful of their share in relieving distress.

This, they said, is indicated by the fact that churches now are being held with welfare workers with a view of seeing how much more of the burden the churches can carry.

By Walter Haight.

(Note—It matters not where truth and fiction begins—W. H.)

I have hunted for a job. I have house-hunted with the wife. I have dreamed in the early hours of a morning-after of head hunting for a job. I have hunted for a job. I have house-hunted with the wife. I have dreamed in the early hours of a morning-after of head hunting for a job. I have hunted for a job. I have house-hunted with the wife. I have dreamed in the early hours of a morning-after of head hunting for a job.

HAIGHT. I've hunted a movie after coming in out of the night sunshine of an afternoon and I have hunted in the lining of my coat for a dime that slipped through the hole of a worn pocket. At the age of 11, I traded the coaster brake on my bicycle for a "bee bee" gun and, with my gang repaired to an alley where we set up bottles for target practice. One of the larger boys, waving his knuckles under my chin to sort of impress me that he should shoot first, a concession I allowed. I was waiting my turn when what to my wondering eyes did appear but a large blue coat and two rows of brass buttons.

Officer Law. What happened in the next few moments never has been quite clear to me. However, I do remember Officer Law holding me with one hand and the gun with the other while marching both of us in the direction of my dad's grocery store. I did not know until years after that the officer gave a big wink as he hauled me before him. From the conversation about "being sent to the reform school" and "he's 21," you would have thought that I was the owner of the bomb that blew up the Maine, instead of owner of a "bee bee" gun that I had never shot. I didn't grow up to be a gunman.

As a member of Company E of the high school cadets I became the companion of a musket of Spanish War origin, a heavy, unwieldy firing piece and for years after I could almost stick a quarter in the impression in my shoulder left by the trigger guard.

You could have thrown over your right shoulder all the salt water I saw during the war, but I was in the Navy. I had my big moment with a gun, the day that we went to the rifle range. Major called it afterward, but somehow I managed to hit the required number of bull's-eyes to make me a graduate marksman.

In the years that followed, I often thought of guns and the joy that must go with hunting. Sometimes when I gaze at a breaded veal cutlet, I think how much more fun it would be to have a bear steak off the big brown fellow that I had killed that afternoon—a bear steak cooked over an open fire in the woods. That would be something.

A-Hunting. Some of the fellows downtown hunted each fall in North Carolina. I had been invited several times but something always turned up to put the trip just out of my grasp. That is until last autumn. I would go down in the mountains for a couple of days. I would be home, family, job—I would go, darn it. The outing would do me good. Perhaps I would get a bear.

I was somewhat disappointed when I learned on route that it was deer we were seeking, not bear. However, I had consolation in a mental picture of a large set of antlers that might some day hang over the fireplace in the recreation room.

We arrived at the hunting lodge at almost dark—too late for hunting but early for cards. My stack of chips went up and down like—but that's another story. Suffice to say I was short on cash and sleep, but high on hopes and big game. And we made ready for the hunt the next morning.

I felt like a chorus boy putting on the uniform offered me. I had brought along a leather wind-breaker, but that wouldn't do, I was told. I must wear the red hat and the coat with the red sleeves. Of course, I know why (at least I found out later). Some of the hunters couldn't tell a deer from a man, but they could distinguish a red hat from a set of antlers.

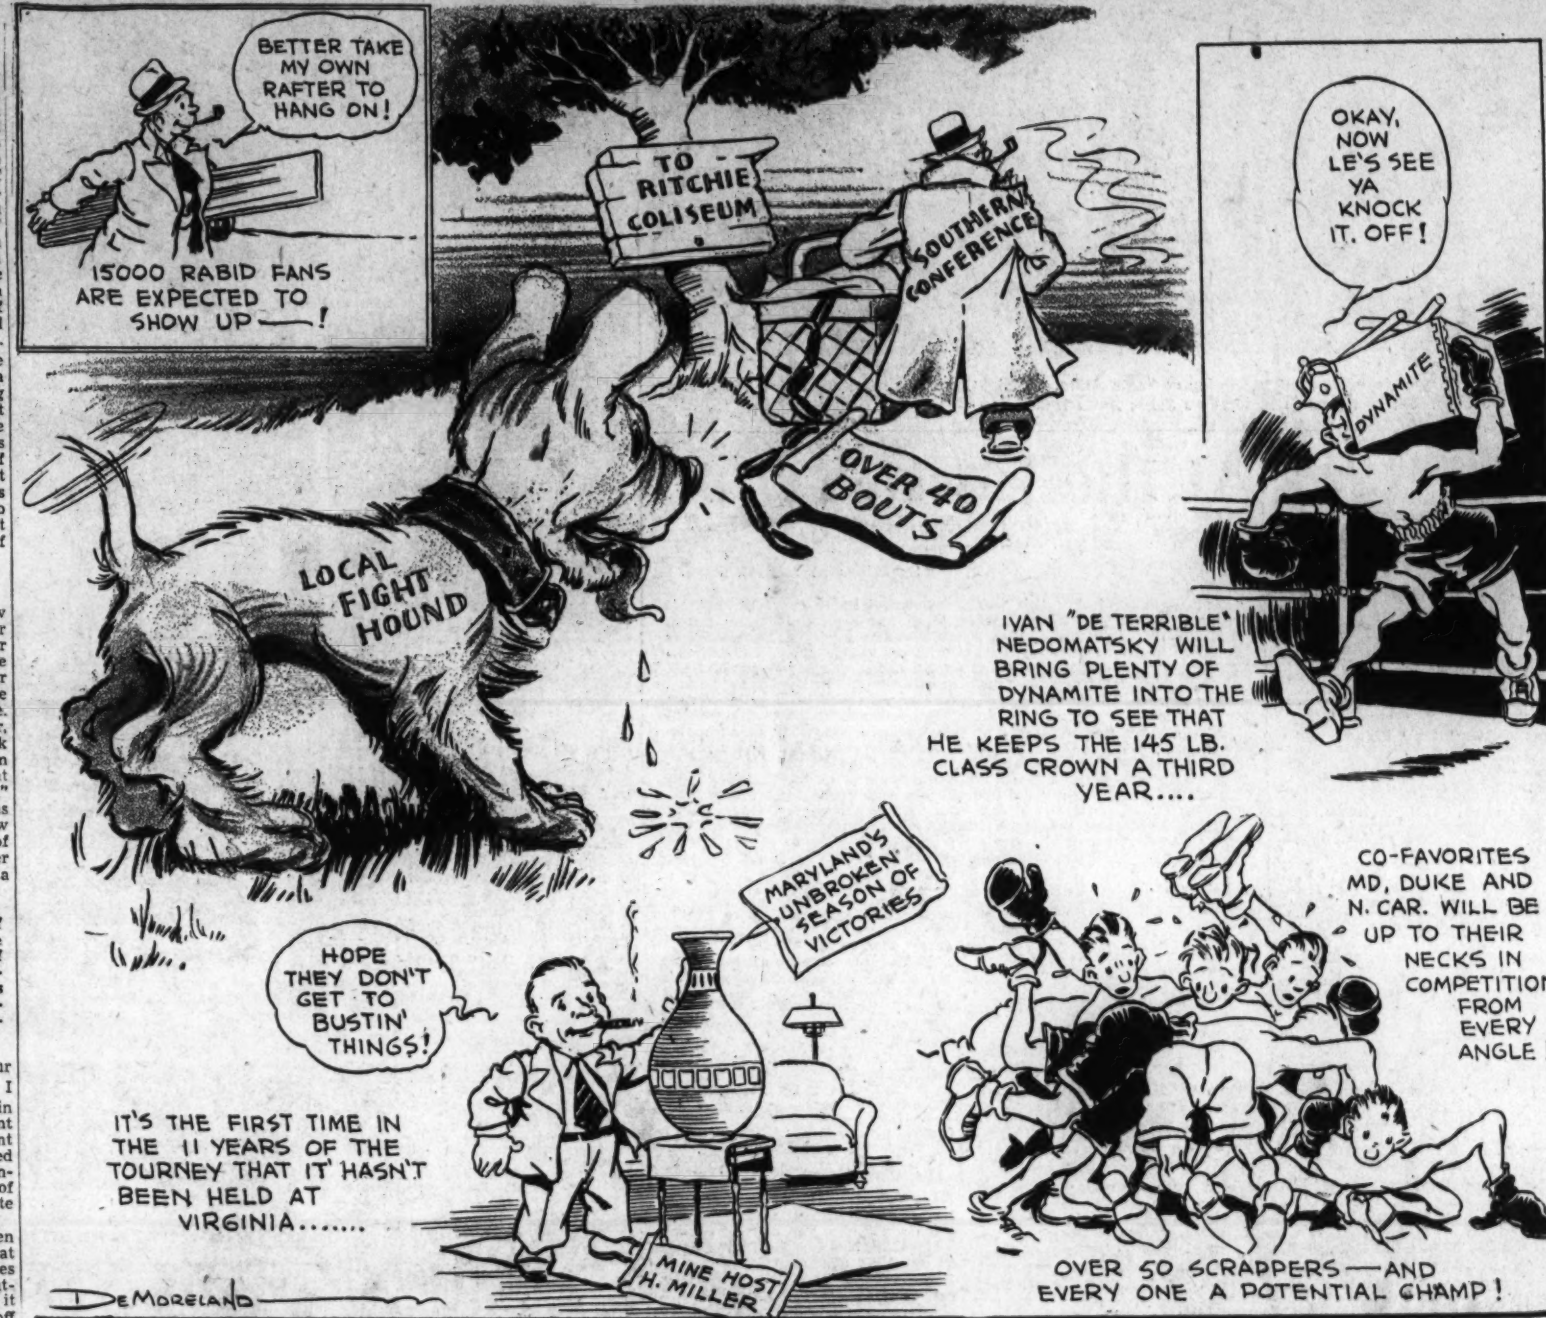

How to Shoot It. Each of us was assigned a sort of caddy. He was supposed to know where the deer hung out. Then again, there were no street signs in the woods, and there was a chance that one might become lost. I drew a very dark Negro who answered to the name of Ambrose King. At a certain point, the party paired off and Brother King and myself were left on our own. For the next hour I thought I was a member of a hiking club instead of a hunter. However, I had the gun, the red clothes and a yen to shoot—something.

King and I trudged along. Occasionally I made a motion as if I were on the alert for a bear or a deer, but King told me that there was no chance in this part. Gradually we made our way up the side of the mountain. Finally we came to a big fat rock with a faint path coming from above and passing close by.

"Boss, yuh stan' here and I goes up th' mountain. I's gwine to come down this here path. When he goes past, yuh wait. King must have him," instructed King, as he left me standing beside the rock. At what hour or minute he would chase the deer my way he did not say. I heard his boots crackling twigs for a while and then came a rather depressing silence, broken occasionally by shriek of a bird. Gun in hand I waited. What seemed to be an eternity dragged by and still I waited. King must have gone to the zoo for that deer. I thought, or perhaps the mountains were out of deer. Maybe the deer were holding King for ransom. At any rate, I was getting pretty darn tired. I remembered giving my wife

Shegogue, Gormley Both Intend to Fight Bouts Starting Today

Maj. Miller Castigates Officials for Double Weighing-In Rule; Duke Co-Favorite With Terps; 18 Bouts on Program Today.

By Lewis F. Archison.

The University of Maryland's hopes of winning its first Southern Conference boxing championship sagged to an almost sub-zero level last night as the team finished preparations for the two-day session of fistcuffing opening this afternoon at College Park. Ed Shegogue, bantamweight, are one of the ailing list, Shegogue having spent yesterday in bed. Both, however, voiced their determination to fight at all costs. Gormley is scheduled to meet Henry Rogers, of The Citadel, in a semifinal bout tonight, but Shegogue is not scheduled to make his tournament appearance until tomorrow.

Praising the boys' spirit on one hand and condemning conference officials on the other for making contestants weigh in both days instead of only once, Coach Heine Miller last night voiced the opinion that they would be ready for duty. Moreover, he thinks Gormley has at least an even chance against Malulewicz and considers Shegogue an outstanding contender in his division.

A Rank Injustice. Miller failed to see the committee's justification for making survivors weigh in for the second day's activities. He pointed out that nothing in intercollegiate rules calls for it, and added that he thought it a rank injustice to all concerned. Led by big Ad Warren, one of the three men who have won three conference championships, Duke's battling Blue Devils, co-favorites with Maryland for the team championship, arrived on the scene of the impending conflict yesterday and had a light workout at the Ritchie Coliseum. Ad pronounced his men fit and ready for the test but refused to make any predictions. "I've seen too many things go wrong in the past tournaments, too many upsets," he smiled, "to be sticking out my chin. My boys are in good physical condition, but of course I can't tell how they feel inside, and that means a lot. But it ought to be a good tournament. "By the way," he added, "How is the ticket sale going?"

18 Bouts Listed Today. The remainder of the 44 fighters will arrive this morning in time for the weighing-in ceremonies at 10 o'clock at the Capitol Park Hotel. The winners of today's bouts will weigh in tomorrow at the same place and same hotel.

Eighteen bouts are on today's program, nine in the afternoon and nine tonight. The first show starts at 2:30 o'clock, and the last at 8 o'clock. Five Marylanders are scheduled to make their tournament debut today, three having drawn byes that give them an added day's rest. Ben Alperstein, 135-pounds; Ivan Nedomatsky, 145; Mike Lombardo, 155; Lancelot Jacques, 165, and Gormley are on today's program. Tom Birmingham, 125; Shegogue and Alex Males, heavyweight, will not enter competition until tomorrow. Four champions will defend their laurels, and four titles await new owners, for Johnny Simpson, 135; George Cary, 125, and Fred Cramer, heavyweight, all of the University of Virginia; and Joe Donovan, V. M. I.'s 155-pounder, are not entered in the tournaments. Virginia resigned from the conference and V. M. I. abandoned the sport following the death of Cadet Jack Eastham after a bout with Lombardo, of Maryland.

Patty Berg Upset, 3 and 1, By Miss Traung in Florida

By the Associated Press.

Ormond Beach, Fla., Feb. 25.—Patty Berg, Minneapolis youngster highly favored in the South Atlantic Women's Golf Tournament, was ousted in a surprising match with Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, today. The score was 3 and 1. Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., medalist, eliminated her friend and traveling companion, Jane Coltran, of Greenville, S. C., 2 and 1.

In the other two quarterfinal matches, Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., earned a hard-fought 1-up victory over Betty Botterill, of Salt Lake City, and Mrs. William Hockinjos, of Lake Hopatcong, N. J., won over Goldie Bateson, Milwaukee, 2-up.

Semifinal matches tomorrow will match Miss Hemphill and Mrs. Hockinjos and Miss Miley with Miss Traung.

Patty and Miss Traung halved the initial hole despite a partial stymie for Patty. Miss Traung sank a 16-footer on the second to go 1 up with a birdie 3. Patty brought it back to even terms on the fourth, but went down 1 again on the sixth. They went all square at the turn.

Miss Traung took the next three holes. Patty played brilliantly to take the thirteenth and fourteenth. They halved the fifteenth.

Miss Traung was within a foot of the hole on the sixteenth in two strokes, and Patty conceded it. The Californian canned a perfect par 4 on the seventeenth and the match was over.

Miss Miley got a scare when her match with Miss Botterill seemed back and forth and reached the eighteenth all square. They went on to an extra hole, which the Kentucky girl took with a par 4. The Westerner needed a 5. Miss Hemphill single-putted no fewer than seven greens with her chum, now playing their twenty-eighth tournament together. Miss Coltran was 1 down at the turn. Both played with determination from there in, but the long, successful putting of the Columbia girl gave her the match.

Card Ringmen Beat Miami, By 5 to 3

By the Associated Press.

Catholic University's boxing team brought its season to a smashing finish last night at Brookland, defeating the University of Miami, 5 to 3. In one of the best matches presented here this winter.

The Cardinals entered the ring under the cloud of a 2-0 forfeit, for Coach Eddie LaFond forfeited the 125-pound and 145-pound bouts rather than risk serious injury to "Tex" Guinan, and Fred Mix, respectively, who are on the ailing list.

Guinan, however, went in for a three-round exhibition with Joey Church, a member of the last Olympic team and conqueror of Lou Gevinson last summer. It gave the fans an opportunity of seeing one of the cleverest amateurs in the ring today in action, and Mr. Church gave them a real show.

"Sully" Greco, key man in all of the Cards' bouts this winter, again paved the way for victory, coming through in sensational style with a clean knockout over Dick Middle-

Maryland Assembly Passes Bill to Kill Horse Tampering

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Feb. 25.—A bill to outlaw "tampering" with race horses on Maryland tracks was passed by the Legislature today and sent to the Governor for his signature.

The measure, which bore the approval of the State racing commission, states that: "Every person who wilfully or unjustifiably interferes with, injures, destroys or tampers with, or who wilfully sets on foot, instigates, engages in, or in any way further any act by which any horse used for the purpose of racing, breeding or competitive exhibition of skill . . . is interfered with, injured, destroyed, or tampered with, shall be deemed guilty of a felony."

The bill would provide a penalty of from one to three years in prison for violators. It is broad enough, said Delegate Charles C. Marbury, the sponsor, to cover doping or sponging of horses, and almost any other attempt to "throw" a race, or win by illegal means.

The bill to make tampering with horses a felony in the State had the support of owners and trainers of horses which race in Maryland. At Bowie last fall there was an epidemic of horse poisoning that permanently affected at least two

Maj. Miller Castigates Officials for Double Weighing-In Rule; Duke Co-Favorite With Terps; 18 Bouts on Program Today.

By Lewis F. Archison.

The University of Maryland's hopes of winning its first Southern Conference boxing championship sagged to an almost sub-zero level last night as the team finished preparations for the two-day session of the conference opening this afternoon at College Park.

Johnny Gormley, light heavyweight and finalist last year, and Ed Shegogue, bantamweight, are one of the ailing list.

Shegogue having spent yesterday in bed. Both, however, voiced their determination to fight at all costs. Gormley is scheduled to meet Henry Rogers, of The Citadel, in a semifinal bout tonight, but Shegogue is not scheduled to make his tournament appearance until tomorrow.

Praising the boys' spirit on one hand and condemning conference officials on the other for making contestants weigh in three days instead of once, Coach Heine Miller last night voiced the opinion that they would be ready for duty. Moreover, he thinks Gormley has at least an even chance against Matulewicz and considers Shegogue an outstanding contender in his division.

A Rank Injustice.

Miller failed to see the committee's justification for making survivors weigh in for the second day's activities. He pointed out that nothing in the regulations rules calls for it, and added that he thought it a rank injustice to all concerned.

Led by big Al Warren, one of the three men who have won three conference championships, Duke's battling Blue Devils, co-favorites with Maryland for the team championship, arrived on the scene of the impending conflict yesterday and had a light workout at the Ritchie Coliseum. Ad announced his men fit and ready for the test but refused to make any predictions.

"I've seen too many things go wrong in the past of today's bouts, many upsets," he smiled, "to be sticking out my chin. My boys are in good physical condition, but of course I can't tell how they feel inside, and that means a lot. But it ought to be a good tournament. By the way," he added, "How is the ticket sale going?"

18 Bouts Listed Today.

The remainder of the 44 fighters will arrive this morning in time for the weighing-in ceremonies at 10 o'clock at the Capitol Park Hotel. The winners of today's bouts will weigh in tomorrow at the same place and same hotel.

Eighteen bouts are on today's program, nine in the afternoon and nine tonight. The first show starts at 2:30 o'clock, and the last at 8 o'clock. Five Marylanders are scheduled to make their tournament debut today, three having drawn byes that give them an added day's rest. Ben

I. abandoned the sport following the death of Cadet Jack Eastman after a bout with Lombardo, at Maryland.

By the Associated Press.

Ormond Beach, Fla., Feb. 25.—Patty Berg, Minneapolis youngster highly favored in the South Atlantic Women's Golf Tournament, was ousted in a surprising match with Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, today. The score was 3 and 1.

Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., medalist, eliminated her friend and traveling companion, Jane Cochran, of Greenville, S. C., 2 and 1.

In the other two quarterfinal matches, Marion Milley, of Lexington, Ky., earned a hard-fought 1-up victory over Betty Botterill, of Salt Lake City, and Mrs. William Hocking, of Lake Hopatcong, N. J., won over Goldie Bateson, Milwaukee, 2-up.

Semifinal matches tomorrow will match Miss Hemphill and Mrs. Hocking, and Miss Milley with Miss Traung.

Patty and Miss Traung halved the initial hole despite a partial stymie for Patty. Miss Traung sank a 16-footer on the second to go 1 up with a birdie 3. Patty brought it back to even terms on the fourth, but went down 1 again on the sixth. They went all square at the turn.

Miss Traung took the next three holes. Patty played brilliantly to take the thirteenth and fourteenth. They halved the fifteenth.

Miss Traung was within a foot of the hole on the sixteenth in two strokes, and Patty conceded it. The Californian canned a perfect par 4 on the seventeenth and the match was over.

Miss Milley got a scare when her match with Miss Botterill seemed backed and forth and reached the eighteenth all square. They went on to an extra hole, which the Kentucky girl took with a par 4. The Westerner needed a 5.

Miss Hemphill single-putted no fewer than seven greens with her chum, now playing their twenty-eighth tournament together. Miss Cochran was 1 down at the turn. Both played with determination from there in, but the long, successful putting of the Columbia girl gave her the match.

At what hour or minute he would chase the deer my way he did not say. I heard his boots crackling twigs for a while and then came a rather depressing silence, broken occasionally by shriek of a bird.

Gun in hand I waited. What seemed to be an eternity dragged by and still I waited. King must have gone to the zoo for that deer. I thought, or perhaps the mountains were out of deer. Maybe the deer were holding King for ransom. At any rate, I was getting pretty darn tired. I remembered giving my wife

Catholic University's boxing team brought its season to a smashing finish last night at Brookland, defeating the University of Miami, 5 to 3, in one of the best matches presented here this winter.

The Cardinals entered the ring under the cloud of a 2-0 deficit, for Coach Eddie LaFond forfeited the 125-pound and 145-pound bouts rather than risk serious injury to "Tex" Guinan, and Fred Mix, respectively, who are on the ailing list.

Guinan, however, went in for a three-round exhibition with Joey Church, a member of the last Olympic team and conqueror of Lou Gevinson last summer. It gave the fans an opportunity of seeing one of the cleverest amateurs in the ring today in action, and Mr. Church gave them a real show.

"Sully" Greco, key man in all of the Cards' bouts this winter, again paved the way for victory, coming through in sensational style with a clean knockout over Dick Middle-

Maryland Assembly Passes Bill to Kill Horse Tampering

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Feb. 25.—A bill to outlaw "tampering" with race horses on Maryland tracks was passed by the Legislature today and sent to the Governor for his signature.

The measure, which bore the approval of the State racing commission, states that:

"Every person who willfully or unjustifiably interferes with, injures, destroys or tampers with, or who willfully sets on foot, instigates, engages in, or in any way furthers any act by which any horse used for the purpose of racing, breeding or competitive exhibition of skill is interfered with, injured, destroyed, or tampered with, shall be deemed guilty of a felony."

The bill would provide a penalty of from one to three years in prison for violators. It is broad enough, said Delegate Charles C. Marbury, its sponsor, to cover doping or sponging of horses, and almost any other attempt to "throw" a race, or win by illegal means.

The bill to make tampering with horses a felony in the State had the support of owners and trainers of horses which race in Maryland. At Bowie last fall there was an epidemic of horse poisoning that permanently affected at least two

Ft. Myer Poloists In 2 Tilts Tonight

The Third Cavalry Indoor Polo Team consisting of Capt. Donald H. Galloway, Capt. Harry W. Johnson and First Lieut. George R. Grunert will cross mallets with teams from the 110th Field Artillery of Pikesville, Md., and the Quantico Marines today.

The first game will start at 7:30 p. m. and will be followed immediately by the second. Both will be played in the Riding Hall at Fort Myer.

Both opponents are known to be hard riding and hard hitting teams and probably the best indoor polo games of the season will result.

All games are free to the public and ample free parking space is available.

Blackbird, Ridden by Stevenson, Wins

Veteran Sets New Mark On Turf

Conte Second, Beaten 4 Lengths; Third to Genie Palatine.

By the Associated Press.
Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 25.—Blackbird, under perfect handling by Charlie Stevenson, made a show of four rivals in the featured Lake City Handicap of a mile and a furlong here today. Running over the grass for the first time, the F. L. Flanders veteran clicked by turf lengths in 1:53 flat, a new turf course record. A. T. Partridge's Conte, a recent winner over the grass, was an easy second, two lengths clear of Mrs. Emil Deneck's favored filly, Genie Palatine.

Prince Sador and Silent Shot trailed the leaders home in that order. Blackbird, 5-year-old son of Bostonia, was the second choice, paying $6.60 or $2. Considering that the course was softened by rains the previous night, Blackbird's race took on added luster. None of the quietest of starters are Widener Challenge Cup eligibles.

The best previous time for the distance in a turf course race was 1:52-3, which Peedeeque made two days before.

Genie Palatine flouted the popular Denmark banner on high to the top of the stretch. There, she faltered as Stevenson, who kept Blackbird in close attendance to that point, gave the Flanders representative a lead. Conte also drove past Genie and set sail for Blackbird. The latter increased his margin as if much the best, merely coasting to the wire.

After a desperately waged stretch duel in which the favored Ipso Facto, with Wayne Wright up, gained a nose victory over Company, ridden by Hubert Le Blanc, backers of the winner were kept in suspense pending the outcome of a foul claim. Wright rode his rival rather close in the drive home, but the stewards did not deem the action bad enough for a disqualification. Company, who had been leading over Ipso Facto. The latter drew up to the pacemaker in the stretch and barely won him down 20 to pay $5.10. Ravenna was a distanced third.

Dear Al:
For the second time this week, we chased home four winners. It looks as if the jinx that Clocker Mike has been putting on me is wearing off. Chic Maud, Ipso Facto, Hermie Roy and Round Table behaved in the manner all Bennings horses should behave. Col. Winn reports that Churchill Downs is experiencing another flood—a flood of applications for reserved seats and boxes at the Kentucky Derby. Eddie Arcaro, who was suspended as the result of his fouling Matey in the Pimlico Futurity last November, will swing back in action at this track on Saturday. He is scheduled to ride Eli Yale in the Flamingo Stakes. I think Arcaro's suspension was about two months too long. He should have been given some time off for his truthfulness. After he had brought Privileged home in front that day and his mount had been disqualified, Arcaro was asked by the stewards if he stuck his hand out at Jockey Richards who was riding Matey. Without hesitation, the boy said that he had tried to ward off the other horse. Arcaro's act was sissy compared to some of the riding I saw in Maryland last fall and the stewards, apparently, did not see.

First race—Notoriety ran a good race last out and deserves the call in this field of maidens. Kurtstinger will do the riding and I believe we will cash. Stormy Sea has been knocking at the door and is dangerous. Drift Along is a fair sort. I've been told.

Second race—Journey On was well thought of as a juvenile and failed to visit the winner's circle. This one might gallop home in this field of nonwinners. Maesur and Rye Beach to take care of the others.

Third race—Dancing Mack was pointed for a killing last out and finished third at generous odds. The veteran needed that race and may make the chief award here. Regular Budden gets in light and is a threat. Good Dame for the show end.

Fourth race—Touche has been waiting for this long route. Gets in with feather weight and appears to be the best bet of the day. Chalkphone and Legume seem to have an edge on the others.

Fifth race—Clamorous gets a nice shift in the weights from the leading contenders in this field. Le Blanc will do the riding and the going to string along. Zaca is fit.

Carolyn's Sky Fleet OF FASHIONS

With Six of America's Most Beautiful Girls
In Person at The Hecht Co. Today

Carolyn's Sky Fleet of famous fashion models is speeding over America to The Hecht Co. in the luxurious United Airliner. Today it pauses in its flight long enough to give Washington a glimpse of the beautiful new Carolyn fashions for Spring.

You will see our newest exclusive Carolyns modeled by the same stunning girls who will wear them on the pages of Vogue. Included are the famous Carolyn Sky Fleet Fashions in featherweight Super Lustratone, a fleece loomed of the finest mohair—in coats and suits. They'll be supported by a glittering cast of Carolyn ensembles and dresses.

See the Carolyn Sky Fleet at The Hecht Co. today in the Better Dress and Coat Shops from 11:45 this morning until closing time at 5:45 this afternoon.
